LONDON, Thursday, Aug. 4.

The Paris Patrie of last evening says it is asserted that the ships of the Division Tourichon, the armament of which has just been completed at Brest, are to be placed in a pied de commission. It is also reported that the same order applies to four frigates, and four vessels of the squadron of Admiral BAUX VIRMENOVA. The squadron of the Adriatic had entered Venice.

TURIN, Wednesday.—Count ARESE has left Turin for Paris.

MARSEILLES, Wednesday, Aug. 3.—French troops are continually arriving in our port from Italy. Marshal CANROBERT is expected here shortly. The Ambassador of Persia has disembarked. Advices received from Constantinople state that the Sultan, now on his journey through the Provinces, will proceed as far as Gheczka. Letters received announce that the Czar is about to undertake a journey to Odessa, whence, according to the Presse d'Orient, His Majesty will be joined by the Prince CONZA, of Wallachia.

TURIN, Aug. 3.—To-day the funeral rites of the French and Sardinian soldiers, who have fallen for the cause of Italy, were performed.

BOLOGNA, Aug. 2.—The Sardinian Commissioners have committed their authority to the Minister, Col. GRAZIANO, who has convoked the National Assembly.

The Marquis D'AZEGLIO has issued a proclamation, announcing his recall, recommending the people to remain tranquil, and promising, in the name of VICTOR EMANUEL, to employ every possible means to obtain the concurrence of the European Governments for accomplishing their just and reasonable wishes.

Perfect order prevails.

PARIS, Aug. 3.—The army continues its passage through Turin for Paris, and is everywhere received with acclamations.

The note in the Moniteur, this morning, has had considerable influence on the Bourse, which opened at an advance of 1 per cent.

PARIS, Aug. 3—12:30 P. M.—A reaction has occurred and Rentes have fallen to 69f. 55c.

PARIS, Aug. 3—1:20 P. M.—The downward tendency continued. Rentes 69f. 30c.

PARIS, Aug. 3—4:30 P. M.—The Bourse closed rather firm but inactive. Rentes 69f. 45c., being a decline of nearly ¼ per cent. since yesterday.

LONDON, Aug. 4—P. M.—The Daily News' City Article, of last evening, says:

"The funds opened at a rise of ¼. The improvement was met by bona fide sales, and prices relapsed, finally closing the same as yesterday. The feeling, with the immediate prospect of the foreign policy, is rather more favorable. In the other departments a good deal of steadiness prevailed. The demand for money is again active. Applications at the Bank, however, have not become sufficiently active to warrant an expectation of a rise to 3 per cent. in a week."

The Seine, with the Brazilian mails, passed Hurst Castle at 5 o'clock this morning.

The Nepaul, with the mails from Australia, Mauritius and Bombay arrived at Marseilles at 7 o'clock last night, and were sent to London at 10 P. M.

The following Australian gold ships have sailed for England since the last mail: The Anson, with £5,688 ounces; the Southampton with 26,371 ounces; the Regia with 31,635 ounces and the Beachworth with 16,000 ounces.

In the railway market yesterday the chief feature was a heavy decline in Great Northern, on the announcement that the proposed dividend for the last half year was only at the rate of 3½ per cent. per annum. The ordinary stock closed at about 3½ or 99 to 100, while in the stock the fall was equal to 4 per cent.

The Times has received a dispatch dated Melbourne, June 11, which says: "The Chinese are organizing a passive resistance to the £4 resident tax. The Bank of Victoria is about to establish a branch in London and will send the managers home for that purpose. The railway traffic on Government lines on an average of six weeks gives 12,243 passengers, or 1,718 per week. Exchange is at 11 per cent premium. Insurance 12."

The Bank rate of discount is 7 per cent. Money on mortgage is 10 per cent. Securities are tending upward.

The Times City Article of last evening says: "The tendency to improvement caused by the rise on the Paris Bourse was not fully maintained. The demand for discount at the Bank has again increased, and out of doors nothing can be done below 2½ per cent. As there have been no gold withdrawals during the last four or five days, this last sudden activity must be attributed mainly to the requirements for harvest, which, owing to the state of the weather, is in early progress. The great prospects of trade in the manufacturing districts are probably exercising a similar influence. About £18,000 in Australian gold was sent to the Bank to-day. The abundance of money in Germany is remarkable. The rate of discount at Frankfort has fallen to 1¾@1¾ per cent."

The threatened strike in the building trade becomes more serious every hour. The determination of masters to shut their establishments against those who acted in combination has been followed by a Hyde Park meeting, at which some thousands of workmen were present, and many speeches were made of an uncompromising character.

A deputation on the Opium trade, which waited on Sir C. WOOD yesterday were informed that the unsatisfactory state of the finances of India rendered it impossible to touch the revenue derived from the trade.

PARIS, Aug. 2.—The Duke DE GRAMONT, Ambassador of France at Rome, has arrived here.

ALEXANDRIA, July 30.—Admiral MUSSAT's squadron has anchored outside the harbor.

PERUGIA, July 26.—The energetic efforts of the American Minister at Rome have obtained for Mr. B. W. PARKER from that Government the sum of 2,425 Roman scudi, compensation for losses at Perugia.

OUR LONDON CORRESPONDENCE.

The Invasion Fever—Political Difficulties and Movements—Mr. Bright and Lord Elcho—The Disarrangement—Mr. Seward in England.

From our own Correspondent.
LONDON, Tuesday, Aug. 2, 1859.

The Invasion Fever has been at its height during the past week. In Parliament and in the Press the symptoms have been manifest enough, but in private society they have been far more so. The offer of the French Government to disarm proportionately with us, rather served to increase than diminish the feeling of distrust that has become so prevalent ever since the sudden cessation of arms in Italy. The enormous augmentation of naval expenditure voted by Parliament has been agreed to solely upon the ground that if surprised by war we should find ourselves overmatched in the Channel. It has been stated, both officially and otherwise, with the utmost circumstantiality, that we have fewer available ships, guns, and men, for the specific purposes of defence at home than our neighbors have at their command, should they wish to attack us. A proposal, therefore, mainly to disarm, is one which no Minister in England would just now think of entertaining. Lord PALMERSTON certainly is not the man to do so; and accordingly you will perceive that he took the earliest opportunity of declaring in the House of Commons that the strength of the fleet to be kept up by sea or land could never be made to depend on that which any other Power might choose, for reasons of its own, to affect to maintain at any given moment. The statement was received with evident approval from both sides of the House. It is, moreover, quite understood that the utmost efforts are making in all the dockyards and arsenals to get additional ships ready for sea, and the proposition of forming a reserved corps of marine volunteers of 20,000 men, meets with general commendation.

But that which may be regarded as the most significant indication of all, is the remarkable speech of Mr. CEBDEN, who though still adhering to his own abstract views of trading versus soldiering, and objecting on practical scientific grounds to the outlay of too much money at any given time upon improved arms and defences which new inventions may render obsolete in the course of a few months, seemed very pleased by his want of confidence in the despotic ruler of France, and with genuine John Bull feeling moved that in default of satisfactory explanation as to his intentions, he was as ready to vote one hundred millions as five to maintain our naval superiority over France. In a word what was said three weeks ago by Lord LYNDHURST has won all but unanimous acceptation, namely, that having regard to the disparity between the legitimate wants of the two countries, the aim of France in keeping up a navy equal to that of Great Britain must be considered as aggressive.

Mr. BRIGHT, indeed, remains uniformly opposed to all precautions that cost money, and intolerant of anybody who maintains the need of them. He declares that his reason for attacking the venerable Lord LYNDHURST in terms of personal contumely, as he did the other day in Parliament, was that he believes him to be actuated by inordinate vanity; and that it was the desire of making a striking speech on a great subject like the possibility of a French war, that impelled the Ex-Chancellor to deliver the oration referred to. When remonstrated with on the subject, he says that clever men are always in their old age remarkably vain,—more so than old women who have once been beautiful; and that one who in his prime has been able to sway the counsels of the State by his eloquence and learning, cannot easily forego the pleasure of demonstrating that his pristine vigor remains. Somebody observed, on hearing this theory put forward by Mr. BRIGHT, that this, if true, would justify his decapitation at sixty, as he was certain to become after that an intolerable evil to Parliament and the country. The Ishmaelite member for Birmingham is indeed not particularly free from the weakness in question. Just now he happens also to have unusual provocative to ill-humor; the last and not the least being the unseating of his wife's brother, Mr. LEATHAM, for Wakefield, and the probability that another relation of the same name will be evicted for bribery, likewise, at Huddersfield, from which he was returned at last election.

Last night we had the long-apprehended India Budget, which reveals a deficit on the last two years of thirty millions sterling; and which opens a perspective of annually recurring deficiency of income to meet expenditure. The ambitious experiment of annexation by conquest has been worked out, and the result is what all wiser and disinterested men foretold—loss not gain. Few will venture to look the question in the face; yet dealt with, and that ere long, it will have to be. In private you hear many of the best and most thoughtful politicians announce themselves already in favor of retracing gradually and spontaneously the path of spoliation, and preparing to make restitution of territory to the tribes and princes of Northern India. It is lamentable to think what blood and treasure have been worse than wasted during the last twenty years, in rendering the British Empire in the East utterly unmanageable and unsafe. The wretched cant of annexing only to civilize and Christianize the natives, is forced to hide its hypocritic head in shame. The Cross refuses to give forth its redeeming light when used as one of rapacious war; and how little our self-glorifying presence or example has tended to humanize the populations we have subjugated may be gathered from chronicles of the recent mutiny. Ah now the unworthy profits of wrong-doing begin to fail; and our statesmen, who never till now betrayed either compassion or remorse, begin to think whether after all honesty might not be the best policy.

With reference to the proposed Congress on Italian affairs, nothing yet has been decided on. Lord ELCHO has been threatening to bring on his prohibitory motion for some days, and it now stands for Thursday. But I hear, to-day, from one of the members of the Government, that they do not believe him to be inexorable; and that even though he should let off his gall-humor in a flippant speech, he will shrink from pressing the question to a division, from the fear least he should win. He is, in point of fact, very much annoyed at being one of the few Peelites not considered fit for office by Lord PALMERSTON. He is very ambitious and presumptuous, but extremely feeble as a debater, and wholly inexperienced in office. Last session he tried to make a great speech on India, and spent weeks in getting up his facts and phrases, but after going through the perfecting platitudes he lost his head, forgot what he had to say, and was forced to sit down, re infecta. Should he fail in his present attempt, or suffer himself to be bought off by private influence, there will of course be an end to his parliamentary career.

Mr. SEWARD has been much sought after here by the Whigs, who desire to keep up the old reputation of their party for political hospitality. He does not make the same sort of impression amongst them as Mr. SUMNER did when he first visited this country as a lion, and his manner is somewhat unfairly contrasted with that of the late Mr. PRESCOTT, Mr. EVERETT, and other men of eminence from your side of the water; as if all men's ways of talking and thinking could be expected to be the same, or as if there were not as great diversities between the conspicuous personages of this and every other country. It is said that when asked by the Queen what he thought of what he had seen of public life in England? Mr. SEWARD replied—"Madam, I have come to Europe to study despotism;" to which Her Majesty rather pointedly replied, "I hope you have found nothing of that kind to study here."

The Latest Mormon Villainies—Letter from Quartermaster-Gen. Crosman.

The following letter, directed to the Assistant Treasurer at New-York, is from the Assistant Deputy Quartermaster-General of the United States Army, whose checks were forged by the Mormons. The checks on St. Louis are printed in green ink; those on New-York are in rose color, and the latter hue of the right tint was not obtainable at the moment:

DEPUTY QUARTERMASTER GENERAL'S OFFICE,
CAMP FLOYD, July 11, 1859.

SIR: Returning to my letter of the 25th of May last, I have now the pleasure to add that the counterfeiters therein referred to, after completing all their arrangements, printed, filled up, and put in circulation here, on the 5th instant, a check on the Assistant Treasurer, St. Louis, for $367 65, which was immediately brought to me, pronounced a forgery, and the issuer of it promptly arrested. The United States Marshal found also in his possession or on his premises a quantity of blank printed checks already prepared for filling up, a specimen of which I send you that you may see how well the work is executed. The copper-plate was also found, with materials for counterfeiting, all of which are now in my possession.

Another of these rogues was subsequently arrested in Great Salt Lake City. He is an engraver, and a large quantity of tools and printing materials were also found in his place of business, in the tithing building of BRIGHAM YOUNG, President of the Mormon Church. These tools and materials are also in my possession.

It is supposed there are others implicated in this bold attempt to defraud the Treasury, but so far it has not been possible to get the necessary evidence for their arrest.

It was the original intention of the parties to counterfeit checks also on your office; but there being some difficulty in obtaining here red ink of the exact tint or hue required, the green ink was adopted, and the fraud attempted on the Assistant Treasurer at St. Louis. From the best information we can obtain, it is now believed that no such checks have been counterfeited on your office.

Both the prisoners are Mormons of high standing, and it is understood that the profits of the transaction were to have inured to the benefit of the Church. All the counterfeits were to have been exact copies of my original genuine checks, and a large amount of them were to have been sold in California.

The trial of these culprits will, it is thought, develop some interesting facts for the General Government.

Thus, fortunately, is nipped in the bud another great crime of these Mormons against the United States.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
G. H. CROSMAN,
Deputy Quartermaster-General.

J. J. CISCO, Esq., Assistant Treasurer United States, New-York.

The Burlington (Vt.) Times states that the Corporation of the University of Vermont has decided to have the erection of a fire-proof library building begun without delay. Probably the work will be started about the 1st of September, with the intention to have the building inclosed before Winter. It will be placed on the brow of the hill, and north of the present buildings; the exact spot not being yet fully determined upon. The Library building is also to contain rooms for the Museum.

The statement of the London Herald that our Government has officially notified that of Her Majesty, that the United States have resolved to abandon privateering as a portion of the maritime law agreed upon at the Congress of Paris in 1856, is entirely without foundation. The Administration strictly insists on its retention.

The Burning of the Reform School at Westboro'.

WESTBORO, MASS., Monday, Aug. 15.

The boy CERDAN, who was suspected of burning the State Reform School buildings at Westboro', made a full disclosure of the circumstances, this afternoon, to J. S. BROWN, one of the Trustees, and also to officer NEWTON, of Westboro', who had him in custody. It seems that the matter had been contemplated for some time, and young CERDAN implicates other boys in the transaction. Combustible materials had been carried from the chair-shop in the pockets of CERDAN, and placed in the ventilator, so as to be ready for use. A match was obtained from the pockets of Mr. GREENWOOD, overseer in the chair-shop, and all things being ready, the fire was kindled in the ventilator on Saturday morning, about 5 o'clock. The names of the other boys implicated are suppressed, until a full investigation is made by the Trustees into all the circumstances. Young CERDAN has been lodged in jail here for safe keeping.

KANSAS AFFAIRS.

A Dismal Account from the Pike's Peak Mines.

The following from the Rockford (Ill.) Daily Register, was addressed to E. B. CLARK, brother of the miner who writes it, a respectable gentleman of Rockford:

ROCKY MOUNTAIN VALLEY, July 24, 1859.

DEAR BROTHER: Yours of June 24th was received July 17th, and you may be sure I was glad to hear from home, as my last from there was dated May 5th. From what I can learn, HORACE GREELEY has set the Eastern world in a great excitement with his glowing accounts of the gold discoveries in the mountains, and report says there is now 20,000 emigrants on the way thither, who would have been home had it not been for said report. Now I will tell you what he knew of the mines, and what I think I know. The Gregory diggings had but just been opened, and they were yielding from 10 cents to $1 per pan. A large emigration had just landed, and the sight of gold, since their expectations had been blasted at Cherry Creek, produced a tremendous excitement. Every man felt himself worth thousands, because, forsooth, he was in the land of gold, and nothing to do but to dig it out.

The miners, and in fact every one here, with a very few exceptions, are the greatest liars I ever saw. GREELEY was here then a few days and swallowed everything that was told him.

That there is gold here, and in large quantities, I do not deny; but that more than one in five hundred is doing better than a common day laborer in the States, is untrue. Some say one in a thousand is a fair average.

There are three kinds of diggings here, viz.: Lead, gulch and bar. The leads are in the rocks on the mountains. They are found by the "Blossom Rock," as it is called; or burned stone on the surface, occasioned, as is supposed, by internal heat or volcanic action of some earlier day, which opened the rock, forming a seam now full of dirty rotten stone, in which the gold is found. Gregory's lead has only the flour gold, and there are or were the richest found. Those leads commence at the foot of the mountain and run in a northeastern and southwestern direction. The dirt has to be washed, which requires considerable water, and all the water is produced of snow as it melts, and that is nearly used up. Besides this, for some cause, these leads have nearly ceased to be profitable, or as they say, "lose the pay dirt."

Some have dug eighteen to twenty feet in solid rock, and have not found the object of their search. Claims that once sold for $20,000 can now be bought for $1,000. A company from Cleveland, Ohio, camped near us and purchased one of these claims, paying down all they had, even to guns and most of their provisions.

They worked it four weeks without one cent of pay dirt, when one of their company was nearly killed by the unexpected explosion of a blast. What will become of them God only knows.

Wages here are only $2 50 per day, and it costs at least $1 per day for board, and work is very scarce at that. Gulch diggings are those located in sloughs at the foot of the mountains. They cannot be worked when the water is high, and when it is dry they have more. They have paid well when they could be worked.

The bar diggings are on the banks of creeks, and are nearly forsaken at present. It requires two or three months to open a lead, and it may pay when opened, but no certainty of it. There are a great many sick in the mountains—five died yesterday, and four the day previous, in our vicinity, of the mountain fever. Our company have been sick, all of us, during the past two weeks.

Taking all things in consideration, we have concluded it would be wisdom in us to "make tracks" for America! Hundreds are leaving every day, and as many more coming in.

We shall start to-morrow, oxen permitting, for home, and hope to reach Council Bluffs in five weeks.

* * * * * * *

I have a great many things to write you, but shall forbear, as I shall soon have a better way of communicating thought. Your brother, H. G. CLARK.

Formation of a Vigilance Committee—Dreadful State of Affairs.

From the Leavenworth Times.

Within the last week, to our certain knowledge, some criminals have been savagely dealt with by a secret organization. In one or two instances the penalty of death has been inflicted. In others, the victims have been punished till they confessed to all facts of which they were cognizant.

The confessions are well calculated to startle the general community and create a feeling of anxiety and distrust, not only in regard to property, but life itself.

It seems that this vast western region is infested with organized bands of horse thieves and cut-throats, who have their head-quarters in remote and obscure portions of the Territory.

The operations of these bands are based upon the information of spies and agents, who are purposely sent to every community.

All the booty secured, or the profits derived from its disposition (with a percentage deducted in behalf of the rogues who receive it,) is put into common fund and used to advance the ends of villany on a still larger scale.

The absence of any thorough organized government or police system, of telegraphs or railroads, enables these scoundrels to play their game boldly, with but little risk.

For long years the citizens of the Territory have been subjected to systematic losses and depredations.

It has become so at length that a man is unsafe in leaving his house for a moment. The thieves are ever on the alert, ready to seize every opportunity. Once mounted and on the prairies, pursuit is almost useless, and capture next to impossible.

During the last year hundreds of horses have been stolen, and never heard of. A gentleman hitches his horse, pays a short visit, and comes out to find his animal gone. A farmer steps into a store to make some purchases, and when he comes out his horse has disappeared.

Houses have been broken open, citizens waylaid, money and goods stolen, farms and farm-houses plundered, and yet there were neither prosecutions nor convictions. The law seemed entirely inadequate to answer the ends of justice.

Goaded by their losses, and such reflections, large numbers of prominent and intelligent citizens have joined an organization which has grown terrible in power and bloody in its judgments.

There is no need to particularize what has occurred. Though cognizant, in the main, of what has been done, we have no desire to make public what few, unacquainted with all the circumstances, would justify, and what, perhaps, would graze upon the public mind.

We wish to appear neither as the prosecutor nor the defender of those who have taken the law into their own hands, and pronounced the award of crime with such rigor and severity.

We well know how a lack of confidence in the courts of justice, and a continued series of successful thefts and crimes are calculated to rouse the worst passions of a border community. We know, too, there are many palliating circumstances to be urged in favor of the people administering punishment according to their own code.

But the experiment is fraught with many dangers to the individual and the State. And while "Lynch Law" may seem justifiable in certain cases, it cannot be sustained or enforced, in a general way, without engendering greater evils than those it seeks to eradicate.

We trust, then, that the action of the "Vigilance Committee men" may soon be brought to a close. They have struck terror into the very hearts of the outlaws, thieves and bandits. They have also gained sufficient knowledge concerning the operations and organizations of the villainous gangs, and those associated with them, to effect their destruction through the law and recognized authorities.

The terror they have induced will put a stop to further outrages on persons and property, and we can enjoy a reign of peace and order.

We feel confident that these suggestions will commend themselves to the judgment of all orders and classes of men. The vigilance organization has done its work. That work has been dark and bloody. The necessity for its prolongation is over—if it did exist—and the time has now come when the functions of established law should be recognized, and the hand of popular vengeance stayed.

The Burning of the Massachusetts State Reform School—Gov. Banks Visiting the Ruins.

From the Boston Advertiser, Aug. 15.

The boy DANIEL CERADON, the cause of all the mischief at the State Reform School at Westboro', is a hardened little sinner. He was sent from Salem, for larceny, about a year ago, and has given the officers much trouble during his stay at the institution. He was ringleader in an organized attempt to escape, which was made on the 2d or 3d of July last. The boys had heard that the Fourth of July was to be celebrated in a style of unusual magnificence, and were anxious to take part in it. Accordingly, when the swill-man drove into the yard, 19 of the boys made a determined rush for freedom. The officers gave chase, and caught most of the truants at once, CERADON among the first. A few spent the night outside, but were captured on the next day. As punishment for this act, the 19 boys were deprived of liberty for one year. CERADON has also been guilty of assaulting one of the overseers, for some trifling grudge. He was arrested on Saturday, by Deputy Sheriff D. F. NEWTON, and locked up to await his examination before a trial justice to-day.

Gov. BANKS, accompanied by Attorney General PHILLIPS, started for the scene of disaster as soon as possible, arriving there about 2½ o'clock P. M. The Chief of Police of this city sent Lieut. OLIVER WENDOUGH, with the patrolmen, by the same train, to render any assistance that should be desired. Their presence proved most acceptable. The boys were found huddled together upon the floor of the large farm barn, presenting a sad but interesting spectacle. They were busily discussing the perhaps unexpected, perhaps foreseen, destruction of their late home, but maintained good order, and a word from their Superintendent would hush them at once to breathless silence. The Hon. SIMON BROWN, of Concord, and JUNSON S. BROWN, Esq., of Fitchburgh, members of the Board of Trustees of the institution, and the Hon. VELONEUS TAFT, of Upton, one of the Worcester County Commissioners, were upon the ground, ready to help answer the question, What shall be done with the boys?

Gov. BANKS was introduced to the little mass of humanity, by Mr. STARR, and addressed the boys briefly. He said he was sorry to find them in so uncomfortable a position, but their friends had come up from a distant part of the State to see what could be done for them. The great misfortune would separate them for a while, would deprive them of their home and their instruction, but as speedily as possible they should be put in some good place. He expressed a surprise at finding that they so well understood their position, and had given such efficient aid to their caretakers; and he thanked them in behalf of the commonwealth, for their conduct. The best thing possible should be done, if they would be patient.

The gentlemen in authority then held a consultation. It was found that the new jail at Fitchburgh, from which no criminal odor yet rises, would accommodate a large party; the jail at Concord stood ready to receive some; and as soon as the bedding could be dried, the west dormitory, still standing, would receive the rest; though food they must obtain, ready cooked, from the village.

Accordingly, 250 of the boys, accompanied by JUNSON S. BROWN, Esq., some of the overseers and six policemen, started for the jail at Fitchburgh. They marched to the village, and there, in an unoccupied building, once VINTON's steam mill, waited for a special train which took them to Worcester, from whence another engine drew them to Fitchburgh, where they arrived about midnight, and were safely disposed of. Gov. BANKS sent them a good supply of crackers and cheese, with refreshing cold water, while waiting in the mill, and took measures to have the rest fed. Gov. BANKS and Mr. PHILLIPS accompanied the party to Fitchburgh.

A Sunday Tragedy in Philadelphia.

From the Philadelphia North American, Aug. 15.

Among the populous neighborhoods of the city, where reside the poor or the vicious, the inertia of Sunday is productive of many evils. In the absence of anything better to do, and with no inclination for attendance upon religious services, hundreds of people spend that time which should be devoted to self-improvement, in drinking, carousing and card playing. As everybody knows, when ardent spirits are introduced among a certain class, red-handed murder stands waiting upon the door-step, while violence attends upon every imbibition. At a house in Adams-street, near Oxford, resided a man named ROBERT HALL, his mother, and a nephew named EDWARD CORNELL. The latter is a young man about twenty years of age, and all the parties are Irish by birth. About 9 o'clock yesterday morning, HALL, being under the influence of liquor, and his nephew equally inebriated, commenced a quarrel. High words resulted. Hard words brought on violence, when, after several blows had been struck, and HALL was getting the worst of the battle, he produced a shoemaker's knife, with blade long, keen and glittering. One deadly lunge, and the blade was buried to the hilt in the body of the unfortunate CORNELL. Withdrawing the knife, and raising it for another thrust, the mother of the assassin attempted to interpose, by doing which she received the blade of the knife through the fleshy part of her arm.

By this time the wounded man had sunk to the floor, when HALL, dropping the knife, ran to escape the avengers of blood. In this he was abetted by his friends, and when the Police arrived upon the spot he had disappeared from the vicinity. Detectives SMITH RUSSELL and SCHLEMER immediately, upon receipt of the dispatch, hastened to the spot and resolved to arrest the assassin, if human energy could accomplish the task. They secured the cooperation of officers FLOOD and DRUMMOND, of the Seventeenth Ward, who were perfectly acquainted with the object of their search. They started in different directions, officers RUSSELL and FLOOD taking a course up the North Pennsylvania Railroad. Here a number of persons endeavored to persuade the officers that HALL had taken another direction, a matter which convinced them that they were upon the track of the fugitive. The result proved these suspicions to be correct. At about 4 o'clock the officers came upon him. He was lying behind a fence bounding the Second-street woods. HALL saw the officers coming, and took to his heels, but was soon headed off and captured. He is a fair specimen of the Seventeenth Ward "roughs," and is considered a hard man to arrest. Officers who have hitherto arrested him have generally accomplished the matter at the expense of their clothes.

HALL is a dyer by occupation, but of late has been engaged in digging cellars. He is thirty-two years of age, and unmarried. CORNELL is a machinist, also unmarried. Both of the parties boarded with HALL's mother. When arrested HALL expressed great contrition for the injury inflicted upon his mother, but appeared to care very little what became of his nephew. CORNELL and Mrs. HALL are both at the hospital. The former is not expected to live.

The Charivari has an amusing caricature representing a Zouave, in full uniform, addressing a respectable elderly gentlemen in plain clothes, apparently a traveler, in these words: "My good Sir, all those histories about brigands and Fra Diavolos are nothing but nonsense. My regiment has been everywhere in Italy, and never once was stopped by any one!"

VISIT OF THE RICHMOND GRAYS.

They Make the Tour of "The Institutions."

The Richmond Grays, commanded by Capt. ELLIOTT, were yesterday the guests of our City. At 9 o'clock in the morning they formed into line in front of the Metropolitan Hotel. Companies A and F of the Seventh Regiment (National Guard) mustered promptly on the ground, and acted as an escort. The municipal authorities were represented by Aldermen Adams, Tuomey, Lynes, Stephens and Seagriff; by Councilmen Leimbeer, Lent, Frear, Van Tine, Bickford, Jones, Ross, Townsend and Babcock; and by Mr. Stewart, one of the Supervisors, and Messrs. Pinckney and Oliver, Governors of the Almshouse. Among the invited guests who were present during the earlier portion of the day, and continued in attendance throughout, were Capt. DIMMOCK, of the Virginia State Guard, Capt. NEWTON, of the Boston Tigers, Mr. GRAME, of the Richmond Whig, Mr. Jas. Lynch, Ex-Commissary-General Robert Ward, and Mr. P. Gallagher. Of the officers of the Seventh Regiment to whom invitations had been sent, there were present Col. LEFFERTS, Lieut.-Col. Crawford, Brevet Col. Shumway, Maj. Bond, Lieuts. Smith and Winkstead, Quartermaster Winchester and Ex-Quartermaster Kemp.

About 9¾ o'clock the military fell into marching order at roll of drum. First went a detachment of Police, then a company of the Seventh Regiment, preceded by their excellent band, then the invited guests, then the Richmond Grays, preceded by their Armory band, and, lastly, bringing up the rear, another company of the Seventh Regiment. The line of march was through Broadway to Canal, thence to the Bowery, through Bowery to Grand, and from Grand to Delancey street, at the foot of which the Hendrick Hudson was in waiting, and received on board all who were duly accredited. The embarkation was effected in presence of a crowd of admirers, who were by no means chary of their applause.

Scarcely had the boat left the dock when the sky darkened and discharged heavy drops of rain. By-and-by, however, the threatening clouds sailed away, the dismal portents vanished, and the day became delicious. Before reaching Randall's Island, to which the voyage was in the first place bent, the party was transferred to the Rip Van Winkle. They were received with military honors by the Island boys, who marched, countermarched, and performed a series of evolutions which exhibited their amazing discipline and a thorough familiarity with regimental drill. These exercises in the parade ground being over, Master RYAN, the Colonel in command, advanced and said:

GENTLEMEN OF THE RICHMOND GRAYS: Upon me has fallen the happy lot of extending to you the greeting and heartiest welcome of the Governors' Guard of Randall's Island. You are welcome as the inhabitants of the "Old Dominion"—the sacred land of Washington—the home of Presidents—the oldest State of our common country. We hail your visit as one of the most favorable means of binding and riveting together the chains of brotherhood and friendly feeling which should ever and always exist between the North and the South. [Applause.] You have come from your homes in the sunny South as soldiers to visit your brother soldiers of the North—"our own Seventh Regiment"—the pride of our City and of our State. You have, in conjunction with them and with the Chief Magistrate and Council of your City among you, visited the home of charity, that your eyes might behold and your minds be convinced of the fact that New-York adequately and amply provides for us and for thousands before us, who, by the force of circumstances and the will of divine Providence, have become the recipient of our City's bounty. Here, upon this beautiful island, may you view this splendid temple of charity, erected and fostered by benevolent bounty. Here, more than eleven hundred children are provided for and sheltered from the rude blasts of adversity and want. Here the orphan and the friendless are recognized as a component part of the body politic, and are taught that by good conduct and assiduous devotion to our studies, usefulness, honor, happiness, wealth and all their concomitants are within our reach. Gentlemen, allow me to thank you in behalf of my comrades for your visit, and the pleasure with which your fine soldier-like appearance inspires us who view your discipline as the best method of promoting prompt obedience, punctuality and close attention. When you return to your Southern homes be assured that your presence here to-day will be regarded as a bright epoch in our existence which will, in after years, prove, we hope, a bright incentive to reward renewed exertions in the battle of life. Carry with you, one and all, the best wishes of the Randall's Island boys for the happiness and prosperity of the Richmond Grays of Virginia.

The youthful orator retired amid enthusiastic plaudits.

Capt. DIMMOCK, of the Virginia State Guard, in acknowledging this address of welcome, said that he had read in the newspapers from time to time for years past that New-York was governed by a set of nothing but political speculators and swindlers; that they had no heart to feel for the widow or the orphan, and that theirs was merely a life of trickery and corruption. But good God, how he had been mistaken! He wished he had powers of eloquence adequate to express his feelings on this occasion. There were thousands of human beings who, but for the City authorities of New-York, would now be wandering through the streets, lost, degraded, ignorant, fitted only for institutions of punishments. But here they were cared for intellectually, cared for physically, cared for morally, and he supposed he might say cared for religiously. He thanked God for those who founded these institutions. There was nothing that he could say to any of the boys more encouraging than that, he might yet be President of the United States. [Applause.] Here they had every opportunity of qualifying themselves for the highest stations in life, and he knew when he looked into their bright, intelligent eyes, that mind was with them. Mind did not belong exclusively to the rich. It belonged equally to the rich and the poor. Indeed the poor could more often boast of it than the rich. Though a stranger, he would beg of the boys to remember that the highest positions in this country were opened to them, and that they might yet live, one and all of them, to fill the most responsible stations that the people of this country could bestow. He would exhort them, then, to go on. They must make haste. Time was important and must not be wasted. The mighty engine was waiting for some of their hands to move and direct the valve. The electric spark was waiting for their intellect to master and control it. Let them hurry up then, so that in a few short years, when those who like himself were now in old age, shall have passed away, their places on the stage of public life would be occupied by men worthy of this glorious Republic, this last and best refuge and asylum for the oppressed of every nation. It was the only place on God's earth where man could now stand up in the full exercise of those rights and privileges which the Almighty intended him to enjoy. They must hasten up, then; they must be men, and might God in his infinite mercy strengthen and protect them. He begged the gentlemen representing the authorities of the City of New-York to excuse him, for this event was a very unexpected one. His feelings were quite overwhelmed. He was very much indebted to the young gentleman for what he had said of Virginia. Virginia had heretofore, he thought, done pretty well. He hoped she was going to do better, so far as the material progress of the age was concerned. Her history had proved her to be hitherto unimpeachable and unimpeached. If she lacked in anything it was in enterprises connected with the business of commercial life. But in that respect he thought she was getting better, and he warned the gentlemen of New-York that in a few years they would find Virginia close upon their heels, for Virginia had determined to go ahead. [Loud applause.]

Col. LEFFERTS, on behalf of the Seventh Regiment, expressed his high approval of the military bearing of the boys, and inculcated the benefit of soldierly habits. He concluded by presenting to the "Guards" through young RYAN, a handsome statuette in bronze, representing a private of the National Guard.

Mr. CRANTON, the Warden, returned thanks for the gift.

These ceremonies being over, the Company was shown through the different establishments on the Island, and before leaving partook of some refreshments.

Blackwell's Island was next visited, and here, when all the principal edifices had been examined, a cold dinner was served, after a brief delay, occasioned by the expected arrival of Mayor TIEMANN, of this City, and Mayor MAYO, of Richmond. The appearance of these gentlemen was hailed with a burst of cheering.

Mayor TIEMANN was called on for a speech, but remarked in reply that he was no man for talking, and it looked to him as if there was no time for talking. He thought, therefore, that they had better fall to as hard as they could.

Mayor MAYO refused to acquiesce in Mayor TIEMANN's declaration that he was no talking man, though he entirely concurred in the assertion that this was no time for talking. Yet he begged to be pardoned for one moment, for though he did not know what he was to say, yet the promptings of a generous and grateful heart forbade him to be silent, at least so far as he felt bound to tender his sincere acknowledgments for the kindness he had received in this City. Upon another occasion he might be called upon to express these acknowledgments more adequately to the Municipality of New-York and to her glorious Seventh Regiment. [Applause.]

Col. LEFFERTS proposed his health of the Richmond Grays, to which Capt. ELLIOTT responded in a clever impromptu speech, characterized by a generous spirit and much fraternity of feeling.

Gov. FLOYD, in compliance with frequent calls, mustered for the Ten Governors, whom he vindicated from the charge of selfish seclusion and official supercilious. He concluded by introducing Governor ISAAC H. GREEN, who welcomed the guests to the Penitentiary, congratulated himself on his good health, which he attributed to the fact that he had not taken physic for the last twenty years; and, in conclusion, stated that he had been assured by Dr. SANDS, who had char

AFFAIRS IN MEXICO.

Graphic Picture of the Condition of the Country.

Description of the "Pagan District."

Narrative of a Journey from Vera Cruz to the Capital—Encounter with Robbers—Sentiment of the Spanish and Indian Races in the "Pagan District"—General Condition of the Country—Incidents of Travel.

From Our Own Correspondent.

City of Mexico, Saturday, July 23, 1859.

Having waited many days, in the hope of joining a party sufficiently strong to contend with the robbers between Vera Cruz and the City of Mexico, and no such opportunity offering, your correspondent concluded to run the gauntlet solo, and take such chances as might fall to his lot. So, one Sunday morning of sunshine and showers—smiles and tears, of course—he left the Hotel de la Diligencia, city of Vera Cruz, in a Troy coach, with eight passengers, and just outside the walls, at the railroad dépôt, the vehicle was placed on a car made for the purpose, six mules attached, and in little less than three hours we passed over this piece of iron road to San Juan, a distance of seven leagues.

The journey from Vera Cruz to the City of Mexico, the people, climate, scenery, productions, and every peculiarity of the country, have been so often described by travelers, that the like attempt, on my part, would simply be a work of supererogation. I relate my personal experience on the trip, therefore, as the means of elucidating the peculiar state of the country at the present time, reserving the right to touch upon the world-renowned wonders of nature, and give some pretty hard facts a light and fanciful setting.

Leaving San Juan at 1 P. M., we continued our route through the tierra caliente, or hot country, up hill and down, on the Jalapa road, yet maintaining a gradual ascent.

Staging has been reduced to a science on the high roads of Mexico. The coaches are good, and the teams, either horses or mules, generally four abreast on the lead and two at the wheel, are of the best description. The coachman is usually an expert, and if the roads are good they gallop, if bad, a constant lashing and cracking of the whip is maintained, and they get along as fast as they can. We soon began to experience the ills of a bad road. The greater part of the distance between Vera Cruz and Jalapa has been paved with large cobble stones, or, as they might be called with more propriety, boulders. By reason of these having been torn up in many places and used as obstructions to the passage of troops, by reason of ruts, the cutting up by enormously loaded wagons and from neglect, this road is now in the worst possible condition. Over this road, however, or one much like it, viâ Orizaba, you must pass from Vera Cruz to the City of Mexico. Over these stones we bounced, over steep pitches we plunged down into deep gullies we swayed and reeled, at the rate of six miles per hour, until it seemed as if every bone would come out of the flesh. But on, we went; passed the Puenti National at dusk, and had a fine view of this great work of art and its magnificent surroundings of scenery. At ten in the evening we reached the small town of Plan del Rio, ate a pretty good supper, rested three hours, and then resumed our journey. Early in the morning, long before the sun reached the horizon, we discovered the noble Pic de Orizaba on the left. From our point of view, it presented a perfect pyramidal shape, covered with snow, and its base resting on soft, scroll-like clouds, delicately tinged with golden hues, while the Pic itself received the full rays of the sun, and towering high above and among the clouds, resplendent and glittering in yellow light and the glory of the morning, presented to the imagination of us poor mortals the portal of Heaven. "Wonderful country!" one ejaculates, mentally, if not audibly.

We now experienced a fresh and bracing atmosphere, which is not known in the country we left but yesterday, though tropical productions continue abundant. The hills and mountains are on a grander scale, the lands over-rich and covered with foliage of the rarest tints. At 12 M., we reached Jalapa, a beautiful town seated on the hills—distance from Vera Cruz, eighty miles. Being desirous of seeing something of the place, and moreover dreadfully bruised in the flesh, I determined to lie over two days for the next diligence. The journey of all the passengers, except myself and one other, ended here. Among them were two who exhibited a phenomenon worthy of notice. They were mother and daughter, both excessively fat; small, dimpled hands, and arms like legs of mutton, such being frequently met with among the señoras of the Republic. During all this rough jaunt, these creatures neither burnt, chafed or rode uneasy, but there they sat on the back seat like two dumplings in a dish, highly comfortable. When a violent motion of the coach caused the gentlemen to knock their heads together or crack their sconces against the roof, the ladies would gently roll up their eyes, ejaculate "Jesus!" "Sanctissima Maria!" or something of that nature in sympathy for the harder bone and muscle of their companions. On arriving at Jalapa they were as chipper, bright and lively as though they had come all the way quietly in a Boston rocker. The power of endurance in fat women is truly wonderful.

The road from Vera Cruz to Jalapa presents many scenes of desolation and ruin, by reason of the civil war now raging. Houses burned or thrown down, fields neglected, haciendas and villages almost totally abandoned. The liberals have troops stationed at Puent National and near Place del Rio. In Jalapa we found Gen. ROBLES and 1200 men, monarchist forces, holding this town, it is true, but they appeared to be a committee of the whole on ways and means to obtain something to eat from day to day. Here was also the conducta of candales, or specie, sixty wagons containing nearly six millions of dollars. It was a heart-rending affair on the part of the robbers to let this specie go.

The beauty of the country about Jalapa and its climate have not been exaggerated. There is no summer, no winter here, but spring, eternal spring. At all times and seasons, the peach, apricot and pear grow side by side with the orange, fig and banana. Corn, potatoes and every kind of vegetable thrive and abound. The climate is in the highest degree healthy. I could not but think that some of our citizens who are now hurrying from their hot piles of brick and mortar, to mountain and sea, would one day search out this remarkable country for recreation and health, when it shall have been christianized.

On the evening of the second day of my arrival, Gen. ROBLES, having dispatches to forward, ordered the diligence to start at 10 o'clock that night, instead of the next morning. The rain was pouring in torrents and the signs foretold a terrible night to be floundering about in a stage-coach. But Mr. D., an American residing in the country, and myself, the only passenger for Mexico, concluded to go rather than wait for the next stage two days later. Ten o'clock came and away we went, amid terrific thunder and lightning, the heavens one sheet of water and torrents coursing down the hilly streets, so that the poor, blinded mules could scarcely make their way around corners and out of the town. We at last reached the high road, which proved to be no better than that on the other side of Jalapa; if anything, worse. We tumbled along, however, after the usual style, upset only once, but luckily being near a ranch, plenty of assistance was at hand to right the coach. Early in the morning we passed the highest mountain summit between Jalapa and Perote. We were in the region of pine, fir and dwarf oak. The storm continued, the blast was cold and piercing, and it needed but a little snow or sleet to make a perfect Winter scene. Descending from this, we reached Perote at 11 A. M., thirteen hours from Jalapa, distance thirty-three miles. Perote is situated on an elevated plain not remarkable for its fertility. The castle of Perote is about one mile north of the town. The civil war rages to such an extent in this region that the town is partially abandoned. The castle is held by a considerable body of monarchist forces. The aspect of this region is bleak and mournful.

The Spaniard Conos, by profession a robber, and one of the worst in the country, but now a General in the army of Holy Mother Church, was here with six hundred of his men. This body had formed part of the specie train escort to Jalapa, and had returned to this point, en route, it was supposed, to Oajaca on a robbing excursion.

We were to resume our journey at 3 o'clock, the next morning, and having the afternoon to spare, Mr. S. and myself walked out to the castle, and when a short distance from the entrance, we met a carriage containing two officers. "There are the Governor of the Castle and Conos," said my companion. Conos put his head out to look after us and came to the conclusion that we were dangerous individuals. The carriage [illegible] horsemen and vanished. The horsemen soon dashed past us into the castle, and as we were about making a detour of the walls, a guard of two, duly armed and equipped, came forth and stated that we were wanted in the castle. "Trapped in this miserable hole," thought I to myself. Into the castle we went, and arriving among a crowd of officers and soldiers, one of the former told the guard that they were ordered to send us to the town and not bring us to the castle, whereupon the officer went to headquarters to learn what the orders really were. Matters looked a little squally. "What is to be the upshot of this affair?" I inquired of D.

"I am afraid we have lost our seats for Puebla to-morrow morning," he replied.

The long line of Mier prisoners who were decimated to death and served out their horrible servitude here, came up before me. Thoughts of the many atrocious imprisonments and barbarities for which Perote Castle is renowned, came into my mind. "Perhaps," thought I, "they read Mulla in my face, and desire to give me an opportunity to take notes inside as well as outside." Many thanks if this kindness was intended. But the aforesaid officer soon returned, and with a polite bow, but sinister expression, informed us we could retire to the town. We therefore tore ourselves away from the gaze of several hundred soldiers of a diluted order, so far as military appearance and action were concerned, and departed. But not until 3 o'clock next morning, when roused by the gruff voice of the coachman, informing me that the coach was ready, and I found myself rolling out of the town, did I consider it a clear case of release from the bloodthirsty Spaniard Conos, or any other robber chief who might be in the place.

Leaving Perote, we enter the highroad to new adventures not of the most agreeable nature. This section of road is much better than that we have passed. The country is generally level, and in some places quite sandy. But we are in the heart of the banditi district. In the tierre caliente, between Vera Cruz and Jalapa, robberies are not frequent. Coming from Jalapa to Perote out of the usual time, we encountered no one, but now, in the ordinary course of events, we shall meet with more or less of the fraternity.

Occasionally a strong party, well armed, bids defiance to the robbers, and passes through without being robbed; but at the present time, as large bands are overrunning the country, and robbing in the name of "law and order," those who are obliged to travel prepare to be robbed by leaving their arms, taking little or no baggage, a few silver dollars in the pocket to purchase some degree of civility, and as little else of value about the person as possible. You can deposit a sum of money at the diligence office, and receive a circular therefor, which is available at any of the stations on the road. With a small carpet-bag, containing a few indispensable articles, eight dollars in cash, and not clad in his "Sunday best," your correspondent was in a condition to go through the operation of being robbed. As stated, the coach, with Mr. S., myself and a Mexican youth, belonging in Puebla, left the place at 3 A. M. The posts are from three to four leagues apart, and twelve miles from Perote we drove up to the first post, which is at the hacienda of CLAUDE SIMON, one of the most extensive and wealthy haciendados of the country. The building extends several hundred feet along the road, and on our arrival there were ranged against the walls some one hundred and fifty peons, chanting the maitines. The darkness of night was still upon the earth. A faint streak in the east, beneath heavy, black clouds, alone indicated the dawn of day; and there this dark mass of humanity stood grouped together, performing the first heathenish ceremony of the day—heathenish to them, for all they do is in obedience to force and the superstition of uncounted, unknown ages. All the harmony of their chant was in those sad, wailing, plaintive tones that come from a lost and doomed people, in whose souls the light of reason faints and flickers in its last struggle for existence. The morning chant of these poor, abject, passive beings, but little above the brute, was one of the most melancholy treats I ever had the pleasure of experiencing. But now they have gone to their labor in the field, to return with the darkness of night. The obtaining of the most labor out of human beings as well as brutes, at the least possible cost, has, under the study of ages, been reduced to a science in this part of Mexico. "Viva la libertad!"

ENCOUNTER WITH ROBBERS.

But we are again on the road, and the hacienda of Don CLAUDE SIMON is scarcely out of sight, ere we are told that robbers may be expected. We went on, however, under this state of expectation until nearly 11 o'clock, when we approached a noted locality called the Dos Cerritos, or two small hills. Here the driver gave a low significant whistle as a warning to us inside, and we soon discovered seven mounted men coming over a rise to the left, and cautiously approaching the coach. The driver pulled up, and his assistant (there are always two on the box) got down and stood at the head of the team. The robbers having satisfied themselves of our numbers, and that we were not armed, came up and commenced operations. They were all masked—all were India-rubber ponchos or serapes, all were armed with muskets or carbines and common horse-pistols, part with flint and part with percussion locks. One continued to circle at some distance around the coach, reconnoitering, three remained mounted with their muskets bearing upon us, three dismounted and ordered us to get out. We got out and they demanded money. I extracted eight dollars from my pockets, which was double the amount I had intended to have on hand for the occasion. As the scoundrels grabbed the cash, I asked them to leave a dollar to pay for breakfast. One of them signified that he would. They then fumbled all over our persons, rammed their hands into our pockets, &c., in search of concealed valuables. While undergoing this operation my curiosity was such that I could not forbear breaking over one of the laws of the institution, and indulge my eyes with a good look at the robbers. The captain, who was on a beautiful white horse, discovered this, and bringing his carbine to bear full in my face, ordered me to lower my eyes. They obtained a few dollars from Mr. S., but nothing from the Mexican youth. The personal examination being over, their attention was turned to the coach. One of them, taking out my carpet bag, signified that he wished it opened. I gave him the key, he opened the bag, searched it thoroughly, but took nothing of its contents, locked it and handed me the key with some degree of politeness. Turning round, I discovered my companions a short distance from the coach, lying flat on the ground, face downwards. This is the position in which the robbers place travelers while they are searching the coach, baggage, &c. Sometimes the feet of passengers are tied together. Knowing that I would not be allowed to witness the conclusion of the performance, which was that of searching the coach, &c., I went out by my companions, and sat down with my back to the performers, resolved not to place myself in a more humiliating position until forced into it. The robbers ransacked a trunk belonging to Mr. D., took therefrom pantaloons, coat, and a few other articles, slammed down the top, threw the trunk back on the baggage rack, and buckled down the boot. They then searched the coach, running their hands into holes between the linings and into the cushions; examining the curtains beneath the seats, &c., &c. By a sly look now and then, I saw mostly the whole performance. That search being over, they came to us and pulled off our boots, and to my astonishment, this little operation paid them better than all else. In the lining of the Mexican's boot they found two gold ounces, ($32.) Having completed their search, the scoundrels mounted, all formed a line, and signified to us to enter the coach and be off. Soon as we were under way, I put my head out to take a parting look. "They will fire at you, if you look after them," exclaimed the Mexican. Nevertheless, I saw that they watched us in a body, until we were out of sight.

This band of robbers, so far as I could discover, was composed of the common Greasers of the country. They were quite taciturn, and what little they did say was in an undertone. They were in great haste, and the rascal who searched my person manifested so much tremor that I was inclined to tell him he should not be harmed. The affair came off in an open, slightly rolling country, with three haciendas in sight, and, on rising a small hill, not four hundred yards from the spot, we discovered fifty-three peons working in a field a short distance from the road. It appears that my experience in this affair was rather of a mild order. Sometimes, the robbers, if they think they will be resisted and desire to frighten passengers, open with a general fire upon the coach. Again, in their haste and tremor, they sometimes accidentally wound or kill, and they beat or otherwise maltreat travelers, according to the whim they may entertain at the time. Women are sometimes stripped nearly naked and otherwise badly used.

Two months since, Mr. BARRON of this city, an American named TAYLOR, also living here, and a Scotchman, came from Vera Cruz prepared to resist the robbers. Shortly after leaving Perote, they encountered a band, and during the skirmish, TAYLOR shot two of the ladrones dead; and from this time the diligence was ambushed and attacked at intervals by constantly increasing numbers, until, within some fifteen miles of Puebla, the ammunition of the passengers gave out, and they barely escaped with their lives to the belfry of a small church near by, where they kept upwards of sixty robbers at bay with a few remaining shots. News of the situation of these passengers was carried to Puebla, and a body of troops started out to relieve them. They arrived in the night, and dashing in among the robbers opened their fire. The scoundrels, mistaking the Government troops for an accession of their own forces, cried out: "What do you fire upon us for? we are robbers too." A rare truth came out here in the dark. One party numbers and robs on an extensive scale in the name of the Church and law and order, the other is composed of petty outsiders, who do things on a smaller scale and are only fit to be hanged; so, securing four of the band, the troops hung them next morning on a tree by the roadside, and the passengers went on their way rejoicing. This is traveling in Mexico, and thus it has been, to a greater or less extent, since the country had a history. "Dios y ley!"

Continuing our route, we had the delightful prospect of meeting two or three more bands of these highwaymen before reaching Puebla in the evening, into which city I had made up mind to enter in the full costume of a Professor of the manly art of self-defence—i. e., stripped to the buff. But some good spirit prevailed this day, and caused a heavy rain to fall, which gave us a free passage through a long stretch of the banditti district, until we reached a small pueblo, called Napalucan, where we learned the robbers were awaiting us at one of their favorite localities about a league ahead, known as the Barranca de Aguilar. Just before arriving at this place we met several arrieros, who informed us that the ladrones had come down upon them at the Barranca and taken their entire train of burros, or donkeys, fifty-three in number, and made off with them to the mountains. Until recently this robbery of animals and freight-trains has not been usual, but now, entire trains with their loads, unless strongly guarded, are taken. The animals are kept secreted in the mountains several weeks, when they are driven by roundabout ways to the City of Mexico or elsewhere, and sold at a very low price, the parties purchasing, driving them to other distant parts where the brands are not known and no questions asked, and in their turn, selling them to a profit. This is the system pursued in New Mexico and Arizona by those interesting and well-beloved citizens of the United States, known as Apaches. The only difference is that the Government of Mexico has not yet reached that point of civilization and refinement which induces it to form treaties of peace and friendship with the highway Apaches of the Republic, or establish agencies whose duty it is to issue to the marauders rations, arms, &c.; neither does the Mexican Government establish military posts which serve only to create business for the robbers and cutthroats. And the Mexican Government, whether from a desire to put down opposition in business or not, does not matter here, but this Government does frequently catch and hang one of their highway Apaches. It might be well for the United States to learn how to regulate that portion of acquired Mexican territory named above, even before entering deeper into the speculation.

THE PAGAN DISTRICT.

The Miramon Government now holding power in the City of Mexico, has recently made a new division of this region of country, creating several new territories and districts. The section of country over which this Government rules, and in which it may be said its principles predominates, is confined to those districts immediately contiguous to the City of Mexico, and they ought, in all justice and propriety, to be marked out and known under the general name of the Pagan District. The geographical limits of this district can be as distinctly defined on the maps, as those of any State or Territory in the Republic. A perfectly accurate conception of its locality and extent, may be formed by taking a map of the Republic, and drawing a line from Perote south, to Tehuacan, on the northern border of the State of Oajaca, thence west through the State of Puebla to Amolaque, then circling through the State of Guirrero to Zacualpan, thence north along the eastern limit of the State of Michoacan to Queretero, thence east through the State of Queretero to Zimapan, and then down the western boundary of the State of Vera Cruz to Perote.

This circle comprehends an area equal to that of the State of Oajaca, and all new maps of Mexico published in the United States, ought to define, clearly and distinctly, this Pagan District, as it enables one to see at a glance, in how small a space, as compared with the entire Republic, are concentrated the evils of three hundred and thirty-eight years of a false religion and a wicked Government. Here lies the heart of the Mexican nation, wasting away at last in the rot of ages, yet still, in its wild pulsations, endeavoring to hold the pall of darkness between the sun and the earth, and sustain the flow of vice and corruption throughout the land. Here is found a concentration of intriguing heads, desperately corrupt hearts and thoroughly diabolical souls, and never, until this evil combination of humanity is overcome by a superior race, and blotted from existence by a higher order of things, will it cease, in a greater or less degree, to fulfill its devilish mission.

There does not exist in the Mexican race inhabiting this Pagan District, except among the women, neither in their religion, their Government, their morals, their habits or their social system—in short there is nothing in their physical or moral construction that affords the slightest foundation upon which to vest a hope for improvement or reform. With here and there a noble exception, all above the poor, laboring Indian, who is himself but little above the brute, are worse than useless. There are but two classes here. One is composed of honest fools without energy or individuality enough to do good or evil, the other of vicious villains ready for any species of villainy. All the ignorance, heathenism, vices, and worst propensities of the Spanish and Indian races combined, have settled in the form of a deleterious sediment on that fairest portion of God's creation, the Pagan District in Mexico. There is no religious, moral, political, social or chymical process by which this sediment can be rectified. Withdraw the foreign influence already existing in that district, (and recent events prove that it is not of a very high order,) leave the people to the teachings of their Church and Government, in twenty-five years, their fair domain would be like unto one great lazaretto, morally and physically.

But the balance of the country, more especially some particular sections, are less imbued with superstitution. The people are less demoralized; they are, both Indians and mixed breeds, of a higher and more energetic physical nature, and more ready in every respect to learn how to yield to the progressive influences of the age. This is the Liberal party of what is called the Republic of Mexico. This party is willing to learn something, and in this party is really the germ of improvement, good government and usefulness. It is not quite fair, therefore, to judge of the entire country by what we see in the Pagan District, as some very intelligent foreigners residing therein are disposed to do.

A comparison between the United States and Mexico is often instituted, and the writer takes this opportunity to advert to one of the principal reasons of the immense difference existing between them. Those who went from Europe to search for a new home in the United States, took with them their mothers, wives, daughters and sisters, and raised up a nation which commands the admiration of the world and gives everlasting hope to freedom. Those who went from Old Spain to New Spain took not their mothers, wives, daughters and sisters, but came alone, and on reaching the New World took to themselves squaws, and propagated a nation of trifling, bloody pagans who have become a by-word with all creation. It is not improbable that the moving principle of the army of filibusters that is so ready to rush into Mexico from the United States to fight this miserable race, finds its origin more in squawism and love of universal license, than in patriotism.

The direct action of a United States military onslaught upon Mexico, and the back action upon the United States, form the most important point in the whole affair for the contemplation of American statesmen.

PUEBLA.

The foregoing remarks respecting the Pagan District I deemed necessary before resuming the narration of my journey from Vera Cruz to the City of Mexico. The city of Puebla is situated on a beautiful and elevated plain, or table land, in the tierre templada, 180 miles from Vera Cruz, and 75 miles from Mexico. My last letter landed me at Puebla in the evening, amid the ringing of bells which I found were sounding the hour of vespers, and there was no general celebration as I had supposed. But about 4 o'clock the next morning, I was aroused by a universal peal of bells. It continued down to the breakfast hour, until dinner, night and into the night. This universal and constant ringing of bells I found to be one of the daily manifestations of paganism in the City of Puebla. The subject of bells is clear and distinct. The chime or sound of church bells, in time of peace, falls sweetly upon the ear, and carries an influence softly sad or cheering to the soul. Church bells, "bells on the wind," marriage bells, funeral bells, sleigh bells, dinner bells and cow bells, each in modulation and in the proper place, perform their own particular service satisfactorily, but when it comes to a city full of churches and the churches full of bells of all sizes and sounds, each one of which appears to be striving to clang—whang the loudest, out of all harmony and pison from early dawn till night, the ear is pained and one becomes disgusted with all bells. But thus it is in the City of Puebla, and in any other but a Pagan community, the priesthood would be indicted for causing an infernal nuisance.

The City of Puebla was founded at an early day by the Spaniards. The streets are perfectly level and run at right angles. The style of architecture which has come down from Assyria, and the solidity of structure which characterizes the labors of the Spaniard in this time, prevail here. The general arrangement of the city is exceedingly beautiful, and its locality is charming. The population is estimated at 70,000, and a more fanatical, thoroughly priest-ridden community cannot be found in the world. It is this fact which induces your correspondent to state here some of the reasons why he calls this a Pagan district in the heart of the country which proclaims to the world in magnificent terms, that it possesses "Religion, Independence," "Liberty," "Law y Orden."

THE CHURCHES.

A stranger arriving in Puebla, or any other large town or city within the Pagan District, will every day [illegible] gather on in various [illegible] to excite his curiosity. [illegible] gathered there in a motley crowd exhibiting [illegible] and [illegible] worthy of [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] and across the river and bring back to them in complete ignorance of the world and the events which have taken place in Europe. They told him that the French had been beaten back in the last battle, and that the Russians were now in possession of Sebastopol. He said to the French: "The Allies have been beaten by your and your children and have my master, but I assure you, I shall be a support to your authority." The French replied that he was in the camp, and that the battle of Magenta was fought the next day. There he refused to believe that the Austrians did not belong to these Russians.

Then the French army was passing through Brussels on the way to meet the Austrians at Solferino, the medical officers were charged to put him operations a singular number of the soldiers for the battle. They ordered that when waiting in a village's supply of provisions, all the news of bad reports should be withheld. The Duke Parmantie, a grandson of Mme. de Staël, who is the new surgeon of the Hôtel Dieu, and Gen. Dray is recovering. Two persons whose of high social rank—they will them at the hospital—are living in a precarious condition in private rooms as one of the civil hospitals. The French honor them with a guard at the door of their rooms.

LATE FOREIGN ITEMS.

Secret Release in France.

The London Post says: Our Paris correspondent sends the following humorous sketch, which applies to not too many of our countrymen on the continent, who laboring under the combined effects of the panic of invasion and dim visions of military distinction to be achieved by themselves:

My friend Capt. Hawkesbury has just returned from London and called upon me to day, exclaiming "How are you, old fellow?—come to have a little chat about the French in general. Hawkesbury's political opinions about France and the Emperor Napoleon have undergone a slight change. I give you his language of to-day:—Do you think, sir, we're going to stand it? Do you suppose half-a dozen newspaper scamps, living in London garrets, are going to be allowed to drag the British Empire into a war with France? No, Mr. Hawkesbury, we will not have it, sir. And I should like to know what the two countries are to go to war about? Nonsense! Just look at the depreciation of property at the bare idea of a war! Why, sir, we shall have double income tax to pay for years, all of us, which will fall heavy on us poor soldiers." Hawkesbury, of the militia, always will call himself "a soldier." Now, his military history—his life, in fact, may be told in a few words. Hawkesbury is simply a retired wine merchant, and a very jolly good fellow. He got his commission from the Earl of ——, the noble and gallant Colonel of the Heavy C——C——. The Earl having still a very large unpaid account with Hawkesbury's famous port and sherry house in the city. Hawkesbury declares we have no right to chase France and the Emperor, if by so doing we cause the income tax to be doubled. His wrath so far has to say certain newspaper writers ought to be hanged, and that the Queen of Prussia ought to bring England into a war and double the taxes, the gallant Captain thinks the sooner we get rid of the free Press the better. Hawkesbury thinks of writing to the Emperor Napoleon himself, and requesting his Imperial Majesty to reduce his army and navy. He intends to point out the great cost of large armaments, the danger their very existence creates of going to war, and other original observations. "The Emperor," he concludes, "knowing England well, knows what we will have and what we will not have." My friend in this respect is like many other Englishmen who honor us with a visit, and argue as if all the sovereigns and governments of Europe were to shape their policy to suit the wants, whims and wishes of a certain class of Englishmen. They speak as Englishmen spoke when the allies occupied Paris. I ventured to tell Hawkesbury that I feared we had lost much influence of late as a nation. Here the Captain became suddenly silent and red, and asked for a little brandy and water. The brave Captain, I can easily distinguish, is not happy about France, although his opinions and tone are modified. He constantly breaks out with, "You too, we can't trust him, Sir; we don't know what he may do. Now, do you know?.....Making the Villafranca treaty so suddenly! He may go to the Rhine—the Russia—make friends with Austria—who the devil can say?" I spare you Hawkesbury's ideas about "neutrality" and "non-intervention;" it is a sort of Hampton Court maze of political opinion, to which it would be cruel to introduce your readers. My friend is charging after dinner, when he delivers his opinions about reforms in the army. He is all for rifle cannon and wide trousers. He takes out his pocket-book and designs an infantry soldier's cap on a new plan, which has been sent to his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge. Hawkesbury has expected an answer daily about it from the Horse Guards during the last three months. Altogether I find Hawkesbury so amusing and full of contradictions as ever. As we parted last night, he repeated what I think I have heard a thousand times, "Mind, the French may land in England; but by Jove, not a man will go back alive!"

Business in France.

The Times correspondent writes, Aug. 2:

"There were some large orders received in Paris last week for articles of luxury for Austria. One shopkeeper received an order from Vienna for 40 carriages. The Russian Government likewise sent an order to Paris for 100 railway wagons. A petition was presented some days since to the Minister of Commerce from the inhabitants of 50 towns, with 2,315 signatures, praying for a reduction of the duty imposed on the importation of foreign coal. The Minister assured the deputation from the petitioners that the documents presented by them should be laid before the Emperor, and that he entertained no doubt that the system of zones would be changed. This system was invented at a period when the French Government seriously desired to conclude a Customs' union with Belgium. The increase in the duty on coal imported by sea into that part of France which borders on Belgium was made for the purpose of assimilating as much as possible the Customs' law on that article with that of Belgium. At present there is no idea of a union of Customs—the Belgian tariff, moreover, has been modified in a liberal sense, and the establishment of railways has destroyed every combination imagined for equalizing the duties according to the cost price of the coal and to the distance it is conveyed. The accounts received from the wine-growing districts as to the prospect of a good vintage are contradictory. Great complaints are made of the oidium in the Gironde, particularly in Languedoc and Roussillon, where it is said to have caused considerable damage. The excellent vintage of last year inspired the vine-dressers with too much confidence, and they committed a great fault in neglecting to cover the vines with sulphur at the proper moment. Fewer complaints are heard in Burgundy. It is said that hailstorms have caused vast damage in the Bordelais. In the Orleanais, likewise, much injury has been caused by some heavy showers. There is still a large stock of wine in the cellars of Bercy, and the brokers there, in order to force sales, tell their customers of the vines having blossomed in the worst possible conditions and that a good vintage is not to be expected. A tun of 705 the cask is announced at Orleans. A letter from St. Gilles of the 27th of July says that the oidium is making terrific progress, and that the vineyards never before presented a more unpromising appearance.

An Insolvent Member of Parliament.

Lord Edward Thynne, a brother of the Marquis of Bath, having succeeded Mr. Nicols, the tailor, in the representation of Frome, an indignant British Democrat writes the following cheerful letter to the London Star:

Sir: Is there a law for the rich man and a law for the poor man? If to each equal protection is granted, then how comes it that the rich and powerful set law at defiance, while for the poor and weak escape is almost impossible?

Lord Edward Thynne, an insolvent, sits in the House as member for Frome. Mr. Townsend, the late member for Greenwich, lost his seat, being unable to pay his debts and from becoming a bankrupt. The member for Frome, Lord Edward Thynne, took the benefit of the Insolvent Act in 1859 and again in 1859. Neither does he offer (or has offered) the smallest dividend to his creditors. Yet he sits in the House, with his schedules on the file of the Insolvent Court, under the ban of the laws, and subject at any moment to be called upon by summons, and obliged to appear before the Commissioner to answer where he got the money to pay his election expenses. His own it could not be, for if it were it would be a robbery of his creditors, as all his moneys and subsequently acquired property was invested in the Insolvent Court for their benefit, and cannot be used without the sanction of the official assignee. If the noble lord had passed through the Bankruptcy Court and obtained his certificate, he would have become free, and if elected for any place could legally take his seat in Parliament. But it is not so; he is an insolvent, and liable to all the disabilities of an insolvent with still unliquidated debts.

Under these circumstances I trust the House of Commons will not permit its own honor, dignity, and high character to be called into question, by allowing Lord Edward Thynne, because connected with and a scion of a noble, aristocratic, and powerful family, the privilege of retaining his seat, unpurged of his insolvency, when it would not extend a similar indulgence to Mr. Townsend, the poor plebeian, whose difficulties were owing to exertions to earn his honest bread by the sweat of his brow for the support of his family.

I inclose my card, and beg to apologize for trespassing at such length on your attention; but I am anxious to learn, on public grounds, whether an insolvent so circumstanced as Lord E. Thynne, can legally sit, or is a proper person to sit in the House as one of our legislators. I remain, &c.,

A CREDITOR OF LORD E. THYNNE.

The last Phase of the Shakespearian Discovery.

To the Editor of the Times:

Sir: I beg to forward you the following communication, which I have just received from Mr. Parker in reference to Mr. Collier's letter of the 10th inst.

Fully all that Mr. Parker states, in conversation, that his Shakespeare was bound in smooth dark leather with a new back, which was lettered, that there was no name of any former possessor written on the covers, and that part of the margins containing the annotations had been ploughed off by the carelessness of the binder.

On the other hand, Mr. Collier's folio is of the edition of 1632; it is bound in rough light-colored sheep, not lettered at all; has on the upper cover, written in a bold recent hand, "Tho. Parkins, his books;" and the corrections have not been injured by the binding.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

N. E. S. A. HAMILTON.

Department of Mss., British Museum, July 29.

July 28, 1859.

My Dear Sir: In reply to your application, I have only to make the following statement, in which you will see that Mr. Collier's memory and mine are in question.

In Mr. Collier's letter to the Times, printed July 19, 1859, he states that he was coming to call on me in 1853 with the corrected folio of 1632 under his arm, but that he thought it so late in the road, and that I gave it back to him with some words. "That it was my book—it is the same; but it has been much ill-used since it was in my possession."

Now, I believe Mr. Collier to be entirely incapable of making any statement which is not strictly in accordance with his belief. I remember well meeting him, as he says, in the road, and as I was then very lame from having hurt my knee by a fall, and using sticks to assist me in walking, he kindly did not allow me to turn back, but walked with me in the direction I was going. I well remember some of the conversation we had during our walk; but I have not the slightest recollection that the volume of Shakespeare was then under his arm, or of my having asserted that "it was my book."

Previously to this interview with Mr. Collier he had shown me the fac simile which he mentions in his letter, when I immediately said, on seeing it, that it was from my book. I now believe that I was mistaken, and that I was too hasty in identifying the volume from a fac simile of a part of a page of it. At that time Mr. Collier knew that there were several corrected folios of Shakespeare in existence, but he did not tell me that there were. At that time I did not know that there was any other corrected folio in existence, and I therefore supposed that Mr. Collier's fac simile could only have been taken from my book. It was not till the 14th of this month that I learnt from Sir Frederick Madden that there are five or six corrected folios now in being, but he (Sir Frederick) did not tell me so till he had laid on the table Mr. Collier's corrected folio, and then he seemed surprised that I did not recognize it.

Again I repeat that, having frequently since the 14th of this month, when I saw Sir Frederick Madden, tried to recollect everything about the book, I cannot remember that Mr. Collier ever showed me the book, but I well remember his showing me the fac simile. I may be wrong and Mr. Collier may be right.

I have a very sound Mr. Collier in every sense, it was a copy of the edition from my impression thither surprised when I saw Mr. Collier's "supplemental volumes" (1853) to find that his book was of the edition of 1632.

I may also add that I certainly did not tell, and could not have told Mr. Collier, that Mr. Gray "was partial to the old books," for I believe he set no value at all on them.

Believe me to be, my dear Sir, yours very truly,

F. C. PARRY.

Blondin Matched by a Barber.

The London Morning Star publishes a letter describing the feat of a barber on the spire of Salisbury Cathedral, the tallest in England, being 400 feet in height, which may be fairly set off against M. Blondin's rope-dancing over the Falls:

Sir: Having observed in your impression of to-day a paragraph headed "Daring Feat," recounting the ascent of Salisbury spire recently made by James Macmanus, for the purpose of oiling the vane at the top of it, perhaps it may not be uninteresting to your readers to be informed that this is, and has been, a not unfrequent proceeding as long as my memory, extending over more than thirty years, serves me; and further, that some few years ago, I think in 1850, eight persons ascended the spire, accompanied by a hairdresser of the city, and seating themselves allowed their heads to be there and then partially deprived of nature's covering through his agency.

I am happy to add that this worthy pupil of Figaro is still amongst us; and that he may long be spared is the wish of, Sir, your most obedient servant, X. X.

Salisbury, Saturday, July 23, 1859.

English Electioneering.

Bottling a Voter.—Another "bottling" case awaits the decision of the magistrates of Bury. On Saturday Squire Howarth, railway laborer; James Park, iron founder, and Squire Lever, cab proprietor, were charged with attempting to carry off one John Parkinson, in order to prevent his voting at the last election or Bury. Parkinson, who appears to have been an enthusiastic supporter of Mr. Frederick Peel, made his way on the evening of the nomination day to the neighborhood of the Albion Hotel, one of the strongholds of Mr. Baxnes' friends. He was asked in, treated to some beer, and ultimately to some rum, by James Park. He states that he saw Park pour a dark liquid into the glass, and it is alleged that this dark liquid was laudanum. Soon after quaffing off the draught he became drowsy, and expressed his determination to go. Park pressed him to remain, but he would not. He was thereupon thrust into a cab driven by Squire Lever, the other two defendants getting inside to guard their prisoner. Parkinson was, however, soon released through the vigorous intervention of a friend, and was able to record his vote next day, although, as he states, he did not get rid of "a stinging taste of laudanum in his mouth" for three days. The case has been adjourned.—Manchester Guardian.

Mr. "Ninevah" Layard Indorses Mr. Cobden.

A banquet was given to Mr. Layard at York, on Friday, July 22. Mr. Layard delivered an able speech, in the course of which he expressed his conviction that Mr. Cobden was perfectly right in declining, at present, to enter the Cabinet.

Sanitary Reform.

A great public meeting was held in London by the Ladies' Sanitary Association on July 21, at which Lord Shaftesbury presided. Speeches were made by the chairman, by Mr. Monckton Milnes, M. P., the Rev. Charles Kingsley, and other leading men, and the News speaks of the occasion as the beginning of a "great educational movement."

Ward's Signals in Europe.—Mr. W. H. Ward, of Auburn, United States of America, yesterday exhibited in Woolwich Dock-yard, by permission of the Lords of the Admiralty, his patent invention for transmitting messages and carrying on correspondence of any length from ship to ship beculmed or sailing within telescopic sight of each other on the ocean, with equal facility to that of the electric telegraph on land. The exhibition was witnessed by Commodore the Hon. James R. Dundonald, C. B., Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, in his official capacity as Superintendent, attended by the entire body of officers representing the various departments of the yard. One of the instruments was erected at either end of a long inclosed lobby adjoining the dock-yard factory, when a lengthened test of messages and replies was satisfactorily carried out. The experiment was extremely interesting and conclusive as to the merits of the apparatus, the result of which was promptly transmitted to Lord Clarence Paget by special direction of the Commodore to that effect, the invention having been pronounced one of the most important of the kind hitherto produced, and likely to be productive of immense benefit to the entire naval and merchant service afloat. The weight of the instrument, which is of the simplest construction, does not appear to exceed 14 lbs. It represents the form of a cross, exhibiting five alphabetically-marked lamps, which are worked by a process resembling the keys or notes of a piano slowly depressed, and at the termination of each sentence the lights are clouded. As regards the working of the instrument, the principal officers of the Pizgard who yesterday attended the experiments affirmed, without hesitation that, any boy of Her Majesty's fleet could obtain a perfect mastery of the system by a couple of evenings' study.

The Government Scheme of a Reserve Volunteer Naval Force.—A Government bill, under the care of Lord C. Paget and Mr. Whitbread, empowers the Admiralty office to raise and keep, from time to time, a number of men, not exceeding 30,000, to be called the "Royal Naval Volunteers," such corps to be raised by purely voluntary entry from seafaring men and others deemed suitable for the service. The term of service will be five years and no longer. The volunteers may be trained and exercised 28 days in each year, both on board ship and on shore, and they may be called into actual service, in case of need, by command of the Queen. When this extreme measure is resorted to the volunteers must serve in the navy for three years, but the service of volunteers in actual service may be extended two years by proclamation. Extra service will bring with it extra pay. The volunteers will be victualled (when called out) like seamen of the fleet; they will be exempt from the militia service, and will be under regulations eligible to our hospital of invalids at Greenwich. They may be also pensioned by the Board of Admiralty. Masters of merchant vessels must make notations on their rolls respecting any of their crews belonging to the volunteer corps, and report from time to time. Volunteers absent from training and drill will be punished by a fine of £20. The preamble of this important bill recites the expediency of keeping a reserve volunteer force of seamen for service in Her Majesty's fleet in time of emergency.

Death of a Belgian Leader.—The great leader of Belgian independence, and the prime promoter of its severance from Holland in 1830, has just died at Brussels, D. G. de Potter. In 1829 (29th Dec.) he stood before the Tribunal of Brabant, arranged for a pamphlet against Dutch rule, and had for advocate Van de Weyer, now Ambassador at London; eighteen months' imprisonment and 1,000 florins made him a popular idol. A fresh article in Le Courrier des Pays Bas got him eight years' exile, from which he returned in a few months to sign, foremost, the decree, 24 October, 1830, proclaiming the Independence of Belgium. He is author of an admirable life of Scipio Ricci, Bishop of Pistoia, to whom Tuscany owes its Leopoldine laws in church matters, and the comparative purification of its Christian worship. Born at Bruges, in 1786, he spent his old age in retirement, and though his Dutch namesake may be more famous, the Belgian Potter has done in his day somewhat more substantially useful than the painter of bulls.

Health of Florence Nightingale.—The correspondent of the Manchester Guardian says: "I am sorry to learn (express of military hygiene) that Miss Florence Nightingale continues to lose strength under her continued labors. The scenes and sufferings of the Crimea made a deep and abiding impression on her devoted and deep nature. She determined after her return to give herself up to the removal of the manifest sources of that evil which she had beheld in full play in the inner houses of Scutari and under the dismal hospital marquees before Sebastopol. Ever since the conclusion of peace she has been laboring at the work of barrack and hospital improvement, with a view to the amelioration of the health of the soldier and the increase of his comforts. She has persevered in this labor in spite of impaired health and failing strength, and she has told her friends, when they remonstrate with her, and urge her to take repose, that it is her vocation; she must work at these objects till either she sinks at her work or sees it accomplished. She has all along been the right arm of the Barrack and Hospital Commission, and, with them, has had to struggle against all the entanglements of red tape, and the obstacles of a vis inertiæ, and prejudice against improvements which are difficult for civilians even to conceive."

Marriage of Albert Smith.—The correspondent of the Manchester Guardian says: "Mr Albert Smith is so much everybody's acquaintance by this time that his marriage becomes almost a public event. It came off this morning. The Rev. J. M. Bellew united the happy pair. Mrs. Albert Smith was Miss Mary Keeley, the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Keeley. What a favorite the scion of such a union of stocks should prove if he should take to amusing the public!

POLITICAL.

"Occasional" writes from Washington to the Philadelphia Press:

"The Administration Democrats of Texas have had a severe contest against 'Old San Jacinto,' and have been whipped. The candidate who ran against Gen. Houston was regularly nominated, and ran upon the platform of Mr. Buchanan, and yet, in the Constitution of this morning there is an article claiming that Gen. Houston, who was elected over the Administration Democrats of Texas, is a fast friend of Mr. Buchanan! It is notorious that Houston has always publicly expressed the greatest contempt for the President. What will such men as Reagan, Wigfall, John Marshall, and other well known Democrats in Texas, say to this? Opposition to the regular nominations, on the part of the Administration, is a heinous offence whenever that opposition is manifested against the Administration, but any Democrat can be elected against a regular Democratic ticket who was upon the platform of the Administration, and be pardoned. Although Gen. Houston ran, and was elected, in distinct opposition to the Administration, and so publicly stated his position to be, his victory is now claimed by the Constitution as an Administration triumph!

Since the peace in Italy, and the declination of Mr. Buchanan as a candidate for reélection, J. S. has been greatly disturbed about the apparition of George M. Dallas, of Pennsylvania—American Minister at London—following his example in 1855-56, and becoming a candidate for the succession. I wrote to you some time ago, about a promise which had been given to a distinguished New-Yorker of the mission to the Court of St. James, and I will not be at all surprised if Mr. Buchanan should insist upon putting somebody into his old place as a reward for expected services, if not for past friendship."

The Hon. Wm. Dennison, Republican candidate for Governor of Ohio, addressed a public meeting at Lebanon, Ohio, on the 11th August, on the political issues of the day. He denounced Administration extravagance, met the Slavery question with a strong expression of Free-Soil sentiment and spoke in severe terms of the Fugitive Slave Law, of which he remarked:

"He had forgotten to remark that when the Fugitive Slave Law was before Congress, the Democratic Presses of the State, almost universally condemned it. They pronounced it then, as he himself had in his letter to the Cleveland Convention, "insulting to the people of Ohio." The people of Ohio were, as a body, willing to carry out all the compromises of the Constitution, the Fugitive Slave clause excluded, but they did object to having it enforced in such a way as to insult the people of the State. A jury of twelve Ohio men were fully as competent to try the question of property in an alleged fugitive from Kentucky, as a jury of Kentuckians were to try the question of property in a horse said to be stolen from Ohio."

The Southern Guardian, published at Columbia, S. C., denies that Senator Hammond is to be regarded as a reliable exponent of the Palmetto Democracy. It says:

"The fact that the Advertiser is published in the neighborhood of Senator Hammond gives it no claim to be recognized as the pulse of the Democracy (that is to say, the people) of South Carolina. Gov. Hammond, although occupying the high position of Senator, does not, so far as his Beech Island speech is concerned, reflect the sentiment of the people of this State. He was chosen to the Senatorial office by the State Rights men of the State, and the veriest tyro in the school of South Carolina politics knows that the doctrines and counsel he uttered on that memorable occasion meets the fullest condemnation from every Southern Rights Man in South Carolina. Whatever influence, therefore, he may have, (if he has any,) or the politics of the Advertiser does not, in any sense, create it the organ of the political sentiment of this State."

Senator Douglas writes to the Maine Democracy, in rep'y to an invitation to speak in that State:

Your letter informs me of the action of the members of the State Committee, appointed by the State Convention which assembled at Bangor on the 20th ult., whereby the invitation of their predecessors to me was ratified, and a "Sub-Committee of seven appointed to make the necessary arrangements" for my visit, if the invitation should be accepted.

These proceedings of the authorized agents of the Democracy of Maine fill me with profound gratitude, and nothing but an imperative sense of duty which I owe to others could prevent an acceptance of the invitation which they have so generously tendered me. My private letter to you, under date of the 12th inst., informed you of the delicate health of my family, and expressed the fear that it would be impossible, under such circumstances, for me to leave them during the next month—August—when the State Committee require my services. A formal reply to the invitation of the Committee was purposely withheld in the hope that I might, after all, be enabled to accept it, as was, and still is, my cordial wish. My family physician now advises me that it would be highly imprudent for me to make the contemplated visit, and requires me to remain with my family, whose health has been, and is, such as to render our usual residence at Chicago during the recess of Congress impracticable.

I have read the resolutions adopted by your recent State Convention with the liveliest satisfaction. The Democracy of Maine have planted themselves firmly on the great principle of Popular Sovereignty, and, if they fight the battle manfully, as I am confident they will, success will crown their efforts. The odds are against them, I admit; but they can be and will be overcome by vigorous, energetic political action. Let them go into the contest with stout hearts and strong arms, resolved to win, and if they do not rout their opponents they will so cripple them at least that they will put a Democratic triumph in Maine in 1860, beyond contingency or dispute. I am, with the highest respect, very truly yours, S. A. DOUGLAS.

Mr. Forsyth, in the Mobile Register, is the chief spokesman of that faction in the South which indorses the morality and necessity of the African Slave-trade. A leading article in his paper of the 9th August discusses the relative morality of the traffic, argues that the horrors of the middle passage arise from the concealment to which those engaged in the trade are compelled to resort; and proceeds to defend piracy in a perfectly straightforward and business-like style. We make one or two choice extracts from this choice article

"Both in ethics and in law the criminality of an act depends on the intent, and on its abstract rightfulness. If a physician, with all due care and exercise of skill, administers a drug which instead of curing determines death, he is absolved by his conscience and by the law of man. Yet, if a man, while engaged in a felonious undertaking, kills another, though that killing be accidental, it is deemed murder in ethics and in law. It has never been thought an abstract wrong to bring emigrants from Europe to these shores, though unutterable misery has often attended this bringing; hence the law applied itself to the mitigation of the evils, but did not interdict immigration. Many pursuits, among them some of the most indispensable, peculiarly expose the human frame and human life to serious perils. The working in certain metals is known to produce incurable diseases; our common place phosphorus matches are produced at the expense of life and health; the delicate laces which ladies prize so highly, cost the perpetual dimness or total blindness of almost a majority of the young eyes devoted to that task. There is, perhaps, no mechanical pursuit which has not its peculiar risks of accident, its peculiar disease, or danger to the physical system. The painter's colic would, however, be a poor argument for the prohibition of that trade; so would the liability of masons to fall from scaffoldings be against the building of houses. No percentage of deaths among seafaring men could be an argument for the suppression of the sailor's vocation. What are called the liberal professions form no exceptions. The risks of the physician or clergyman only ennoble his humane calling. The missionary, encountering chances of peril tenfold those of the most forward soldier on the bloodiest battle-field, is esteemed a martyr, and those that send him feel themselves engaged in a Heaven-blessed work.

We allege these illustrations—and they will suggest to every mind countless others—not as affording in every instance an exact parallel to the African Slave-trade, but to show that the abstract morality of every human action must decide the weight and importance of any objection that can be urged against it."

Again, Mr. Forsyth says:

"Africa's principal commodity has always been slaves—thousands of years ago merchants brought them across the Sahara to the Mediterranean; they were an important article of trade on the Red Sea; and every child knows from the Arabian Nights that African slaves were common in the East from time immemorial. If we take the objectors' own figures for the value of the palm-oil, it is a pitiful sum in itself, and becomes absolutely ridiculous when compared to the value of the products of civilization which Africa would receive in exchange for the slaves we might buy of her. Something too is said about the labors of the missionary that would be interfered with. The very reverse can be demonstrated; but we content ourselves with the admitted fact, that as the result of all the money and heroic lives spent since the days of Vasco de Gama, there are not now in all Negro Africa one hundred thousand professing Christians. To this fact, which we state not rashly, we contrast four millions of the black race, most of whom are members of Christian churches or more or less influenced by their teachings, and all of whom live under the benign influence of Christianity."

The Ohio Anti-Slavery Convention, which met at Columbus last week, adopted resolutions denunciatory of the Fugitive Slave law, exhoring the clergy to preach against the sin of Slavery, and indorsing the action of the Oberlin rescuers. It was also determined to employ a lecturer to canvass the State, and, if possible, to establish a newspaper organ. The meeting was largely attended.

Letter from the Hon. F. W. Pickens on Popular Sovereignty.

We are permitted to publish the following extract of a very interesting letter from our Representative at the St. Petersburgh Court, the Hon. F. W. Pickens, of South Carolina:

You give a gloomy view of affairs among our friends. You speak of the South not being liberal enough. I know not what you refer to, but my own opinion is, that at this juncture in our affairs things ought not to be pushed to an extreme either North or South. The extreme and revolutionary ground taken by a large party North, has necessarily driven the South, or a portion of it, to take extreme ground in defence. Mr. Seward declared that Free and Slave States could not exist in one Union—either the Slave States must become free, or the Free States become slave, &c. Now all know that the Free States never can become Slave States, and of course such a declaration by an authorized leader of the great popular party North, is nothing short of a declaration of extermination or subjugation, and is a direct war upon the Federal Union. Yet the majority of the North seem to receive him. I think it an error, and am glad that but few persons South assume that there must be Congressional legislation in advance to protect Slavery before it has been in the new Territories. It is by no means a demand of the South. For legislation involves discretion and deliberation, and that gives jurisdiction in Congress over the whole matter. And yet if popular sovereignty, in a people of a Territory, gives a Territorial legislature the right to declare, before they are a State, in what property shall consist and in what it shall not consist, then "popular sovereignty" gives them more power than Congress itself has, for it is the Constitution alone that can declare that. To declare this, is the highest exercise of sovereign power, and can emanate alone from the original law of society, made as a compact by a people or peoples, in convention assembled. There is no such thing as "popular sovereignty," except as expressed through forms of law, unless in cases of revolution; then it becomes a great national right, inherent in man. "Popular sovereignty," in its most ordinary legislation assuming jurisdiction over property, is mob law. A territorial legislature has no "popular sovereignty" in any sense. There is no such thing even as the sovereignty of the people of the United States; but there is such a thing as the sovereignty of the people of the States—as ascertained and expressed through the States. There is no sovereignty in the Government of the United States, for it is the creature of the Constitution, which is a compact between real sovereigns. What proves this is, that there is no power to alter or add to that compact, except through three-fourths of the States themselves in separate Conventions assembled—and these States can even abolish the Government, and make a new Government entirely. There is sovereign power, and this is the sovereignty of the United States. There is no power in the Government of the United States to create even a freehold and the grant of land in the new States or Territories, only vests a freehold by the Government, as the agent and trustee of the conjoined sovereignty of the States by special compact, giving the Government power "to make all needful rules and regulations as to the public territory," &c. The people of a Territory are in a chrysalis state, and the very term "Territory" shows it, for it is not a State. A State is not population alone; but it is boundary, land, water, location, eminent domain, organic and fixed law—fundamental and independent right. All this is in the idea of a State. Population legislating against property before the community have made a compact and organic law to give them the attributes of a State, is a solecism. That popular sovereignty which looks to the people as the original source of all power—a great, inherent and inalienable right to be exercised in the last resort, on great occasions, to vindicate the liberties and the power of a people when there has been oppression, or to create and make a new government—is a great right, and lies as the basis of American Independence. But popular sovereignty to be exercised in habitual and daily legislation by the people assembled, is full of confusion and impracticable. All mere legislative assemblies are derivative, and in no point of view have they any popular sovereignty. There is no power in Congress to create a State—that is an emanation of sovereignty and belongs to the people in Convention—and in that Convention, making a State, they can give the powers and forms of a State. The only power Congress has is in these words, "New States may be admitted by the Congress into the Union," which pre-supposes the State created, and under the power given from the States in the compact of Union, which allows Congress to make all "needful rules and regulations" respecting the Territory, &c., &c. They can confer the right on the people within certain boundaries or their Territories to assemble, under certain regulations, to form a State, and if it has a "Republican form," and does not violate the "needful rules and regulations which Congress has prescribed beforehand in the "Territory," then they are bound to admit it, and have no right to look de hors the record making the State. This is all the power they have, and there is nothing short of an original organic law of any State that can say, in what property shall consist, or in what it shall not consist. "Popular Sovereignty" or "Squatter Sovereignty," for any such purpose, is revolutionary, and assumes rights in a state of nature, and leads directly to confusion and conflict. And so, too, does any jurisdiction in Congress so declare in advance, in what property shall consist or not consist amongst a people of a Territory previous to their becoming a State. This belongs to the Federal Constitution, and to be expounded by the Federal Judiciary in "all cases in law and equity arising under the Constitution," and in the very terms of the compact itself. It must be a "case" arising between "meum and tuum," and on an issue presented in Court. Any other doctrine confers upon legislation what belongs to the Constitution alone, and will lead to confusion, and a dangerous assumption of legislative discretion and power. Hence the wisdom of Clayton's amendment to the bill for the organization or acquisition of the territories from Mexico, which left that precise power to the jurisdiction of the Federal Court, and in which Mr. Calhoun himself acquired. The Federal Constitution proprio vigore covers all Federal territories, and alone defines in what property shall or shall not consist; and any attempt by mere population alone to assume jurisdiction while a Territory is usurpation and revolution, and involves a solecism in constitutional law. What proves that the Constitution proprio vigore covers all United States territory of every kind is that clause which defines treason and how it shall be proved, and limits the punishment even. No act of Congress can change or enlarge it, or carry out the Constitution more specifically on that most important of all questions, than the instrument does itself. The Constitution is itself the law, and federal officers can only enforce its provisions in every particular as long as it is a Territory of the United States. And what is property and what is not property belongs to that instrument, also as much as the definition and punishment of treason. Both belong to sovereign power, and its usurpation in anything below to assume such power. Under the decision of the Supreme Court in the Dred Scott case, the South ought to be satisfied; and if, in a Territory, an issue is made as to property in any shape, or if indirect regulations are made, intended to destroy or take away right in property as recognized by the Federal Constitution, then let the courts under federal jurisdiction decide the issue. Federal officers and federal courts must give protection, and if not then it is revolutionary and beyond reason or law, and cannot be provided for in advance—for our whole system rests upon the supposition that the Constitution is the supreme law, and after that falls in a proper issue made under it, then arises the question as to expediency of an appeal to arms at present, whatever other "regulations" may be necessary in Congress to protect any property in any "Territory," might well be left in abeyance, to be decided by the exigency as it arises. So, too, the loose ideas of "popular sovereignty" ought to be left out of any issue; for, in fact, it has no constitutional or definite meaning. Our whole system is a system of regulated liberty, well defined by chartered rights, and when we travel beyond that, we get into the regions of theory, and there is no human tribunal to decide where the right is. The only great rule of right is the fundamental law of the land. Anything else one man has as much right to advance and claim as another, and, in fact, is itself revolutionary. I hope our friends on both sides will see the wisdom and patriotism of healing the bitterness that exists, and the light of truth will clear up all divisions, and bring us together as a band of brothers for the great contest in 1860. It will require consummate statesmanship and disinterested patriotism to save our party, and, with it, to save the Constitution and the Union.

I have written you this fully because you brought to my attention our difficulties, and it seemed to gratify my answering, particularly as off in this distant land I have been able to consider the questions involved in the bitter partisan contests of the day. Excuse me if I have intruded, and be pleased to answer me as soon as you can, and let me know what you think of the above, for I have seen nothing in any of the descriptions that embraces the ideas I have here attempted to develop to you. I was in Congress and spoke—then a very young man, only 26 years old—on the admission of Michigan, and entertained the same views. I differed in that vote from Mr. Calhoun, and thought Congress had no right to deny the admission of Michigan because she had allowed persons not naturalized to vote, because I thought then, as I do now, the qualifications of voters, or the right to vote, belongs to State or local authority alone, and is only limited by that clause of the Constitution which prescribes that those shall be allowed to vote, who are allowed in a State to vote for the most popular branch of the Legislature thereof. The Hon. R. J. Walker has a mind eminently qualified to investigate these abstract views of sovereignty, &c., and I feel sure he would agree with the views expressed above. He has a high and comprehensive genius, and I recollect once we had a full conversation on sovereignty and sovereign power, in which we exactly agreed. When I was first a member of our Legislature in 1833, I wrote a report from the Committee on Federal Relations, on allegiance and sovereignty—in which I took the ground of sovereignty being undivided—and consequently allegiance, &c., &c. This was the reason why my attention and reflection were so eagerly turned to these abstract questions. But enough. I know I am writing to one who comprehends any thing.

Very respectfully and truly, yours,

F. W. PICKENS.

Closing of Union Park.

New-York, Saturday, Aug. 13, 1859.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Sir: As Editors are supposed to know everything, and have, generally, a willing disposition to communicate information on all topics of public interest, I would respectfully ask if there is any ordinance of the Common Council requiring the closing of the gates of Union Park at 9 o'clock P. M.? It seems quite absurd that the Park of a great Metropolitan City should be closed at the very hour, during these delightful Summer evenings, when its weary citizens are craving to enjoy it. There has been a good deal of ridicule heaped upon the Bostonians for their ordinance imposing a fine upon any person smoking a cigar in the streets of that goodly city, but I think they could turn the laugh upon us if they knew that we locked up our Park at the time little children are put to bed. It is quite amusing to see, as I have seen, the people driven out at the hour of nine, like a flock of sheep. EARNEST INQUIRER.

The Saguenay—A Word to Travelers.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Several parties who have just returned from a journey upon that wonderful stream, the Saguenay, deem it but just that those who may succeed them be advised as to the necessary preparations for the jaunt.

The boat is of very moderate size and limited accommodations, but provided with very obliging and capable officers, who, it is to be regretted, have no permission to supply the vessel with the comforts expected.

The table is shamefully neglected. Our beef was of the rough pieces, mutton passable, veal hardly desirable; these, with very salt ham and tongues, fresh potatoes and carrots, you have the usual bill of fare "the upper stratum of salt, (we had a few eggs and a half dozen chickens one day,) and, strange as it may seem, ice very scarce, so that we were compelled to drink water without it.

And yet, gentlemen who joined the vessel at its lower, as it touched on that side, chickens, eggs, fresh butter, berries and vegetables of all kinds were to be had at those places for about half the cost of the same supplies at Quebec or Montreal.

Parties should rely upon their own supplies, or postpone the trip until the enterprise shall fall into other hands. One small steamer showed a Parser's account of over $1,200 received for 54 hours.

Victims of Opium.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In your issue of the 2d inst., on "The Alarming Increase of Suicides," you very truly remark that among other causes, the use of opium has a powerful tendency to bring about this truly alarming state of things. But, Sir, there are a great many persons who have become slaves to this pernicious practice who have had no hand in bringing it upon themselves, and they of course should be entitled to our sympathy. I refer to those who have had this fatal drug administered to them in its various forms by their physicians or some kind friend, while on the bed of affliction, to alleviate inordinate pain or some distress of body, by which means they become habituated to its use, and it is almost death for them to be deprived of it. Several of this class have come under my own observation, and I have no doubt there are hundreds who would gladly give up this baneful habit, could they but find a remedy, or have some plan suggested whereby they could do so without experiencing the great nervous suffering attendant upon suddenly relinquishing its use without any substitute or remedy. I have taken the liberty to send you these few lines trusting that your well-known sympathy for suffering humanity will induce you to insert this in your excellent and widely-circulated paper. Hoping that it may bring forth a response from some of our wise medical or scientific savans on this subject, as I believe there has never been any effectual remedy found or plan suggested for this alarming and increasing habit, that is sending thousands to a worse than drunkard's grave.

Yours, truly,

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The screw-steamship City of Baltimore, from Liverpool on the 3d inst., and Queenstown on the 4th, arrived at this port yesterday. A brief abstract of her news, which is one day later than that by the Vanderbilt, was forwarded by telegraph from Cape Race, and published in the TIMES of Saturday morning. The disarmament of the French naval forces was proceeding with vigor. The Army continued its passage through Turin, and the troops were constantly arriving at Marseilles en route to Paris. The Australian mails had arrived at Marseilles, and brought intelligence that gold ships were on the way to England with 106,832 ounces of gold. A dispatch from Melbourne, published in the London Times, states that the Chinese in Australia were organizing a resistance to the £4 resident tax. The building-trade strike in London was becoming very formidable. A demonstration had taken place in Hyde Park, which was attended by several thousand workmen, caused by the determination of the masters to shut their establishments against all those who acted in combination. The proceedings were of a most uncompromising character.

We publish this morning an interesting letter from the Hon. F. W. PICKENS, of South Carolina, our Minister at St. Petersburgh, to Mr. GEORGE N. SANDERS, on Popular Sovereignty and other political topics.

The President, yesterday, appointed Professor ALEXANDER DIMITRY, present translator of the State Department, to the Central American Mission.

The boy CREMAR, implicated in the burning of the building of the Massachusetts State Reform School at Westboro', Mass., has made a full disclosure of all the circumstances attending the transaction. He asserts that other boys were concerned in the crime, and he has disclosed their names. It seems that the act had been contemplated for some time, and the combustible material with which the fire was set in the ventilator, had been conveyed from the chair factory in the pockets of CREMAR.

The Richmond Grays, now on a visit to this City, were the guests of the civic authorities yesterday. Escorted by two companies of the Seventh Regiment, Committees of the Boards of Aldermen and Councilmen, and a deputation from the Tea Governors, they made the tour of "the Islands," and proceeded thence to West Point, from which they returned late at night, exceedingly pleased with the events of the day.

The rowing regatta which took place at Staten Island, yesterday, attracted some five or six thousand persons. Two or three steamboats made excursions to the Narrows, carrying large crowds, and the ferry boats to and from the island went full each way throughout the afternoon. There were three races, the prizes ranging from one hundred to twenty dollars. In the third race of four-oared boats, Dan Bryant, (No. 1,) won the first prize of one hundred dollars.

The Court-martial on Maj. CROSS was concluded yesterday, as far as the published proceedings are concerned. Maj. CROSS submitted some documentary evidence of the high esteem in which he had been held as a public officer, and a written defence was read for him by W. B. B. CROSS, Esq., of Washington.

No satisfactory explanation has yet been given of the new flavor of the Croton, but the Commissioners make a visit to the source of the supply to-day to investigate the cause. It is so evidently a swampy flavor, that there can hardly be a question that the flavor is owing to a greater quantity of swamp water being used than usual. For some cause or other, there has been loss of spring water than ordinary, and that the taste complained of is not caused by any foreign substance is evident from the circumstance that the water is more clear than usual, and deposits hardly any sediment.

The counsel for Dr. ELLIS, held upon various charges of obtaining goods on false pretences, yesterday applied for and obtained a writ of habeas corpus and certiorari, taking his case into the Supreme Court for review.

The habeas corpus case of Mrs. HAGGARTY, who charges the Rev. Dr. CUMMINGS, pastor of the Roman Catholic Church in Twenty-eighth-street, with the abduction of her son FRANCIS, came up for hearing yesterday, before Justice INGRAHAM, of the Supreme Court. The testimony of the petitioner and of another son of hers was taken, and the hearing was adjourned to Thursday next.

Yesterday Cotton was heavy. Sales 800 bales. Flour was much cheaper, and Wheat was also lower, yet neither was actively sought after. Corn attracted more attention at improved prices. Sugars were in fair request. Linseed Oil and the better qualities of Resin were in better demand. Coffee, Provisions, Rice, Tallow, Hides, Leather, Metals and Fish were very moderately dealt in. The Freight engagements were restricted.

COUNTING WITHOUT NEW-YORK.—In Governor WISE's letter to BERNARD DONELLY he managed to blunder upon one sensible remark,—that in which he represents himself as counting without this State when engaged in the enumeration of his Presidential chickens. New-York will in no contingency vote for him, and by acknowledging that patent truth from the start he saves himself much subsequent disappointment. The vote of the Empire State in 1860 is, at best, somewhat uncertain, and depends upon contingencies which cannot be foreseen. Such, if we mistake not, is felt to be the case by the well-informed leaders of all parties. We do not, of course, here allude to politicians and journals whose recognized vocation it is to boast and shout and admit no possibility of defeat. These have their uses, but counsel and the development of truth are not within the scope of their activities. Our reference is to the men who perform the head-work of parties, who direct their movements, and who never wittingly deceive themselves, however frequently they may perform that agreeable service for their friends.

Republican journals abroad are wont to speak of New-York as absolutely certain for the nominee of the Republicans next year, no matter who he may be, or who his opponent. Now it will be conceded that the State is more likely to vote for the Republican than for the Democratic candidate; but that result may be changed by events quite possible to happen. New-York did not give a majority for FREMONT; she fell some forty thousand short of it. Most of the men who voted in 1856 are alive still, and they have not materially changed in their sentiments or convictions. There may, or there may not, be a union of the Opposition as against the Democracy; and until events are further developed it will be safe for all the Presidential aspirants to "count without New-York."

The country must have been overjoyed with the announcement, flashed yesterday by telegraph from Washington to all parts of the Union, that "the Administration regards the position of affairs in Central America as of great importance under existing circumstances." It was comforting to hear that the President had at last discovered that the interests of the United States in Central America are worthy of attention and consideration.

Many persons had almost begun, perhaps, to despair of any change for the better in our relations with these important countries, while the protector of Mr. MIRABEAU LAMAR and the friend of the illustrious BOWLIN continued to potter over foreign affairs in the laboratory of the White House.

The tidings that a prophet was at last to descend and touch these dry bones into life, were therefore welcomed with impatient delight by all who can appreciate the greatness of the stake we have in this quarter of the world. Mr. CALEB CUSHING was first designated as the chosen regenerator of our Isthmian diplomacy. That a better man, wiser, more calm, more judicial in the temper of his mind, more humanely patriotic, might have been selected, few would deny; but Mr. CUSHING, with all his faults, towered so high above the average appointees of the Administration that his nomination would have been cordially received on every side. Mr. CUSHING, however, declined the proffered honor—if indeed it were ever really proffered him—and we were thrown back again into the abyss of conjecture. Perhaps, after all, BOWLIN was our destiny; perhaps the "roving diplomatist," whom PALMERSTON fears, and British Consul BROWN, of Genoa, so wofully miauled.

Mr. BUCHANAN has set our minds at rest. He has laid his hand upon the one man in all the land of whom no one but himself could ever possibly have imagined that he would be called to fill a "position of great importance, under existing circumstances," in the diplomacy of America. He has appointed Mr. ALEXANDER DIMITRY, at present Translator in the Foreign-office at Washington, to the post of American Minister in Central America. Mr. DIMITRY, we believe is a Greek by origin, and a Democrat by profession of political faith. He probably speaks the Spanish language, in which respect he has the illustrious BOWLIN at a disadvantage; and we have no reason for supposing that he will imitate the lotus-eating LAMAR, by falling asleep on the public quays at Managua, with his dispatches tumbling out of his pocket. The President has exercised more than his usual shrewdness in securing a representative so negatively admirable. He has not commonly been so fortunate or so discerning. Let no one quarrel with this last effort of the wisdom which protects our happy country on the ground that some American statesman of proved capacity might have been intrusted with looking after American interests in this important position of affairs. The policy and action of the United States Government in Central America during the past few years have not been of a nature to inspire ambitious men with a wish to serve their country in that part of the world. What could an American statesman hope to achieve in Central America with Mr. BUCHANAN at his back in Washington? What has been actually accomplished since Mr. BUCHANAN was lifted into power?

As a most advantageous route to our Pacific possessions, the Nicaragua Transit, one would think, was of sufficient importance to meet some attention from a patriotic Government; but the famous Transit imbroglio is as far from arrangement as ever. Our citizens have serious claims against Costa Rica and Nicaragua, but they have never been redressed; and our notorious failures to negotiate a treaty have brought us into contempt, (we had almost said,) and certainly into disrepute with these same miserable States, whose offences we can so graciously pardon even to the ninety-ninth time. Our blunders and mismanagement in Central America owe their origin chiefly to the fact that this country has never been properly represented there. While European Powers could afford to send enlightened statesmen on a mission which they consider of some political and commercial importance, the greatest American Power has been intrusting its interests and its honor to the Mirabeau Lamars—as incapable of guarding those interests as they were of taking care of themselves or their dispatches.

This, the President's latest appointment, is in perfect keeping with all his views of foreign policy and all his theory of domestic administration.

French Emigration.

If the prosperity of a nation is to be guaged at all by the indisposition which its inhabitants show to quitting its shores, France may certainly claim to be regarded as the most fortunate of States. The Ministry of the Interior at Paris has just issued its annual report of the emigration from the Empire, for the twelve months ending July 1, 1859. In all that time the total of French subjects who left their native soil to seek a new home, was 13,813. Of this number 9,004 went beyond the French dominions, 4,809 taking up their abode in Algiers. We shall be surprised if the American census of 1860 does not show us a heavier movement of our native population during the same time, from the New-England States into the unsettled territories west of the Mississippi. In comparison with the tide which sets outward from the British Islands, and the German States, this French efflux is still more inconsiderable, and may fairly be described as a mere rivulet. During the same year, 1858-59, indeed, the German emigrants going westward through a single French port, have largely outnumbered the whole French emigration from all parts of the Empire.

It is not easy to establish an accurate estimate of the whole German exodus; but the accurate statistics of the British blue-books give us ample means for appreciating the enormous difference between the outflow of the British and of French population. In 1857, for instance, the emigrants of English birth alone from England amounted to 78,560, against 18,809 French emigrants from France. The Three Kingdoms furnished a total of 181,051, and Scotland alone, from her scanty three millions, poured a larger contribution into the colonizing service of civilization than France from her vast population.

A decided falling off is observable in the French emigration of 1859 from that of the previous years 1857-8; a falling off amounting to 4,926 souls. This diminution is attributable to the combined action of several causes. In the first place, the French harvests in 1858 were far better than in 1857, and so closely do the population of France cling to her soil, so minute are her agricultural subdivisions, that a very slight reduction in the supplies yielded by the earth is sufficient to affect instantly and emphatically the well-being of the nation, and so to determine a stronger or slighter tendency towards the promises of the untried foreign world.

Then the commercial crisis of 1857, by shaking the faith of Europeans in the resources of the new world, from which that crisis began its destructive cycle, and from which it borrowed its name, served to check the tendency of French, as well as of all other European emigration, at least towards North America. While the decline in French emigration to the United States, between July, 1858, and July, 1859, amounted to more than 1,200, the decline for the same period in the French emigration to South America was but a little more than 700; although the difference between the average amounts of the emigration in each of these directions amounts to little more than 100 in our favor. The Italian war, too, has doubtless played its part in this direction, by stimulating a demand for labor to fill the vacancies caused by the withdrawal of vast bodies of able and vigorous men into the ranks of the army. It is probable that the interruption of French trade and commerce, which, in consequence of the unsettled state of public affairs, has by no means counterbalanced this influence. For the extent of that interruption, as is proved by the half yearly report of the Ministry of Commerce, also just published in France, has been greatly exaggerated. The essential general prosperity of the French people is at this moment unquestionably greater than it was at the end of July, 1858, notwithstanding the facts that the crops of that year were singularly abundant, and that the nation has since passed through the sharp trial of the most colossal war waged since Waterloo. The proofs indeed which France has given since January, 1859, of the elastic extent of her internal resources are equally startling and interesting; and the appearance of the official documents which will make possible an accurate analysis and appreciation of the great economical paenomena of the year in France will be awaited by statisticians with unusual curiosity.

The Great London Strike.

There was a time in the history of modern Christendom when the association of skilled artisans into bodies bound together by a community of interests and of occupation was essential to the protection of the working classes, from the tyranny of capital and of military force. The guilds of the Middle Ages were so many organizations of skill and industry for self-defence, against the pressure of feudal insolence or despotic interference. They were the pillars of that municipal independence, which kept the principles of social liberty alive, down to our own later days.

But there is no good thing that may not turn to evil, as we are taught to believe that there is no evil thing out of which good may not be sooner or later wrought. And the workmen's guilds of feudal Europe became in time the instruments of oppression and the obstacles to progress. Through them the earliest inventors were forced to fight their way to recognition. Through them the legislation of modern Europe was perverted into a legislation for special classes and special interests; and the worst forms of what was long falsely called "protection to industry," came through them into being. The button-makers of England induced Parliament to defend the rights of brass buttons by making all other buttons illegal. Parliament clothed the magistrates of Spitalfields with authority to fix the wages of silk-weavers, and distributed its power throughout the kingdom to regulate through nominal associations the natural movements of capital and of labor. On the Continent the rule of the guilds has never relaxed its supremacy. It yearly drives the German workmen in hordes upon our shores to escape its crushing tyranny.

The dangers which the guild was originally so strong to ward off, having passed away, that which was a beneficent has gradually become a paralyzing and a fatal influence.

In our own days the growing strength of capital has evoked the principles of the guild into a new activity, all the more formidable that it is irregular, spasmodic and unconsecrated by the ideas of permanence and of interdependence among its members. The modern "strike" aims to be to capital what the guild was to feudal force. But so radically different are the circumstances in which these new combinations have arisen, from those of the ancient guild, that the "strike" has rapidly degenerated from a guarantee of rights to the laborer into a tyranny over his actions of the most irresponsible character. We have seen this fatal institution attempted, with modifications more or less significant, to be established from time to time in our own country. But it has never assumed with us the full proportions of wrong and folly of which it is inherently capable; and our people will, therefore, do well to bestow their attention for a moment upon its perfect development in the great "strike" of the London builders, now pending on the other side of the Atlantic.

There are about sixty thousand skilled laborers employed in the building trade of the giant metropolis. When, to this number, their mere rude, unskilled assistants are added, the London force of the whole trade can hardly be supposed to be over-estimated by Lord BROUGHAM at ninety thousand men. These men, with their families, represent, according to the best theory of statistics, more than three hundred thousand human beings, a total nearly equal to the population of the City of Philadelphia. The wages of these men average about seven dollars per week, making an income equal, when we take into consideration the superior cheapness of the essentials of living in London, to nearly twice the same amount in New-York, and these wages are paid to them for fifty-eight hours of labor a week; the London builders working ten hours a day every day in the week, excepting on Saturday, when they work but eight hours and a half. With this state of things it is averred the mass of the trade, comparing their condition with that of their fellow-subjects, are satisfied; especially as the steady tendency of wages—and especially of builders' wages—in London, for the last ten years, has been to a rise. For nearly all of these men and their families, regular occupation is of course necessary, not for comfort only, but for their very existence; and an arbitrary decree of the government, forbidding them or any of them to accept work offered to them would be justly regarded as an intolerable interference with their private human rights.

Such an arbitrary decree has now been issued not by the English Government, not by any regularly-constituted and responsible authority in the State, but by a mysterious oligarchy sprung up among themselves; by a Venetian council of agitators, who have suddenly assumed the absolute power of a "strike." A small number of men, having acquired or simply seized the right to be heard by their fellows, have issued their edict commanding all the builders in London to stand still; all their whole machinery of this vast and complicated machinery to come to a pause until the employers of this army of laborers shall concede a change of wages, by striking off one hour in ten for the work of their men.

These men have their "Board of Managers," their "Secretary," their whole organization of officers, salaried by the poor, hard-working mechanics in whose name they profess to be acting. They are in fact a despotism, constituted no one knows how, obeyed no one knows why, intending no one knows what. In the sacred name of Labor they are trampling under foot the inherent right of every man to dispose of his own labor as he shall see occasion and opportunity. In the name of Liberty, they are setting on foot all the enginery of intimidation, corruption, bribery and violence, to compel the workingmen of their trade into the course of action upon which they themselves have decided. The immediate fruits of their movement are already appearing in great positive suffering, in vast popular meetings of hungry and excited men, who will be the easy tools of any fanatic or of any villain who may choose to use them. Grave men in Parliament take the mischief up. The Press deplores and discusses it. The builders, meanwhile, and their families starve and madden. Can it be wondered at that with such examples before them of the facility with which the catch-words of freedom can be made the snares to lead great masses of men headlong into the mercy of a vulgar tyranny, the true friends of popular rights in England should stand abashed and confounded before the arguments of social prescription and of political skepticism? Democracy in the Old World, as in the New, has no enemy half so formidable as its own misguided self.

College Progress.

To the question, "What knowledge is of most worth?" says the Westminster Review, "the uniform reply is—Science. This is the verdict on all counts." We have already published the admirable article in which that philosophical Quarterly argues the question, and arrives irresistibly at its conclusion that for self-preservation, gaining a livelihood, the due discharge of parental functions, and the interpretation of natural life, the most important knowledge is Science; and, a point apparently still more difficult to prove, that for purposes of discipline, intellectual, moral and religious, it is the most efficient study. Radical as this doctrine seems, we believe that not only will the world receive it, but that in the higher institutions of learning in our own land it has already come into acceptance, and our Colleges, shocked as they may be to have the fact stated concerning them, are acting upon that faith. Twenty years ago, few of our Colleges had more than one or two men to deliver the lectures and guide the studies of pupils in the whole circle of natural sciences. They dosed out sparsely their physics, as if only by the kind permission of metaphysics, thrust in their meagre chemical experiments, and brief lectures on geology, as if an apology were due to the dead languages for the intrusion. The latter were encouraged, the former tolerated. It was by devotion to the latter that scholars were to be made, honors won, and Alma Mater glorified. All this has been changed, but so gradually, and only on the compulsion of a slowly-changing public sentiment, that we still hear the complaint that the Colleges are busy as ever teaching only the literature of a dead language, and ignoring the fact that this is the nineteenth century, with a living language and a live world enjoying its light. If any one doubts the change, let him consult the "catalogues," or take a turn during the holidays among the scores of Colleges whose commencements our columns have lately been heavy with. Of almost every one, its first boast is its collections of minerals, its cabinet of specimens, its apparatus, philosophical, astronomical and chemical. The Professors who are first mentioned on the list are they who are chasing the comets, raking new asteroids into the scope of vision, spending their leisure in geological surveys, and in their laboratories making new combinations for the use of artists, agriculturists, and mechanics. The Greek and Latin Professors, of old, were always impressing upon their pupils the absolute necessity of keeping up their classics on going out into the world. If there was any virtue in their study except that, by detaining their attention away from all practical and living topics for four years, when the string was let loose, the hungry mind whizzed further away from all such entities and quiddities into practical life, than it otherwise would have done, the advice was as needful as it was salutary. For so remote are all studies that engage young men when they emerge as baccalaureates from those that occupied them under the old college régime, that it required all the influence of most esteemed advisers to maintain in the graduate a speaking acquaintance with, or the faintest relish for his old loves. In College he learned that the sacred sisters that were to watch over his future career of usefulness, were the Languages, Mathematics and Metaphysics. Ushered out, his first order was, "to the right about face," and precious little does he see of his promised guardians henceforth. But if the professor of geology were to exhort his student to jealously take heed that he lose not his fondness in after life for the story of mother Earth, he would as much waste words as if he entreated him tenderly to love roast beef and forget not how nourishing is bread. Whatever or however practical his future pursuits, he never treads out of a path that is not paved or rough with the topics of his past study. Loitering in an August day under the shade of a boulder, flinging pebbles from the beach into the sea, or rushing breathless down the street to be in before banking hours close, he is always among his specimens. The Chemical Professor who has once got into his pupil's head the principles of his science, may safely trust to the perpetually-recurring reactions and combinations presenting themselves in the processes of surrounding nature to keep them there. The Botanist safely foregoes his injunction to keep posted in the science of vegetable nature, for every growing grain in his pupil's field, or flower in his door-yard, the rose in his buttonhole and the cabbage in his market-basket, will put on the injunction and enforce it. And the young Physiologist, grounded in the lecture-room in the laws of life, must lay down his own life to be rid of the reminders and prompters of his early lessons. As a mere matter of policy, it was wise in the Colleges to lay out their curriculum around science as a centre. They now have the honor to lead their Alumni up to the threshold of the temple they are to dwell in, not as of old, after four years restraint in an atmosphere redolent of ancient odors, to open the door upon a world of living beauty, its air fresh and untasted, and the "Hill of Science" as steep and as distant as when they long ago sat down in the enchanted castle. The older Alumni of the Colleges look back upon them with a grave though tender compassion that they four mothers should have, out of their very good, years of their time. The younger ones rush back to her arms with lips full of gratitude for the good guidance she furnished them.

Meanwhile, the Professor is no longer the near-sighted, thin-faced and close-shaven man, in rusty black, that he was. Now he wears a beard, drives possibly a fast horse, is discovering gold-diggings, indicating new mines, and pointing out to capitalists the wealth of unannounced coal measures. The change has been wrought by the spirit of the age, and no argument of scholastic zeal, or rare old learning, dreading that its occupation's gone, can undo it.

Schools, Private and Public.

Our people are proud of the present of our Common School system, and hopeful of its future as well. Though no sensible man will blink the truth that the management of this system in New-York City has fallen too often into the hands of irresponsible, venal and corrupt men; though the real estate of the School Fund has to pay toll to light-fingered Commissioners, and taxes to swindling trustees; though our boasted inspections are in many cases a dreary farce, and our vaunted course of instruction a too exclusive scheme for developing the memory, to the sad neglect of every other mental faculty; yet, with all its glaring faults, the system is grounded in sound policy, and is capable of infinite good for young Americans. Its actual faults are just grievous enough to stimulate the friends of universal education to a stricter watch over details; to provoke them to descend to the unpleasant work of primary meetings, and to exert all honest appliances for rescuing from the hands of licentious trustees and avaricious commissioners, the most important interest which "good men" have suffered to slip out of their own control. But if our Public Schools were infinitely better than they are, if their enemies could not say with truth that they waste weeks of their pupil's time in preparation for the vain display of vulgar receptions, stimulating exhibitions, and all manner of idle trumpery; if their friends were not obliged to confess with more misgivings than they care to manifest, that in many schools greater attention is given to the form than to the substance; and that in some which stand highest in popular favor, greater efforts are devoted to proving that the children of the richest citizen can be nowhere better cared for, than to kindling the latent tastes and developing the unawakened curiosity of the children of the more dangerous classes, there still would exist and flourish private schools—the necessity for them would be scarcely less urged than now it is. In theory the Public School system covers all the ground. It takes the children of paupers and of merchant princes alike, fits them by its democratic communion and impartialities for graduation to the Free Academy or College, and thence in turn leads them with an equal hand across the threshold of the professional school, or to the apprentice's bench. But practically there always has been, and probably there always will be a wide territory over which the private school alone can extend its sway. The parent never should surrender to any teacher, however accomplished or admirable in character and in intellect, the entire education of his offspring. But parents in our mad Metropolis of commerce are a very busy and a very negligent class. They need the sharp spur of a direct tax to prompt them to bestow any thought upon the teacher, to see whether he does his duty to his pupil, and upon the pupil to see whether he profits by the instruction he receives. They pay their quota into the school fund, but the return is too remote for them to watch it with care. By so much the more directly as the quarter bills of the private teacher press upon their purses, by so much the more probably may they be expected to study the value of the teaching their children receive. Then, for a large class of children there is a special training wanted. Special accomplishments are to be acquired, which the Public School has no business to go out of its course to furnish. It is better that these specialities should remain undisputed with the private schools than that the public system should stultify itself by coming as a rival into the field. Again, if there are grievous errors in physical training, if there is over confinement, or exposure in cramped, unventilated rooms, to be looked after, it is easier to secure a remedy in the small private schools, from the one responsible head, than in the caravanserais maintained for public uses under a cumbrous committee. For these and other reasons the growth of private schools has kept pace with that of public schools in our City, and there is no necessary antagonism between them. They both subserve a common interest. They have common aims, common objects, and we suspect that common faults pervade them. Now is the time for those most deeply interested in each to revise their methods, look up the sources of errors and plan reforms. By the middle of next month there will be reopening in New-York and Brooklyn, some four hundred public schools, with 80,000 children intrusted to the care of their teachers, and probably not less than one hundred and fifty private schools, with an average of over thirty pupils each. Let parents turn aside from stocks and goods for a day to consider to which of all these they can most safely commit the keeping of their offspring; where their young systems will most be spared from perilous trials; their intellectual character, developed with wholesome and well-proportioned care, their morals most wisely guarded from corruption. There is nothing worthier their attention in all the news of all the steamers; in all the items of the hour; in all the prospects of moneyed gain or moneyed loss that flush their cheeks to-day with hope, or pale them with concern.

TROUBLES IN THE AUSTRIAN ARMY.—Much excitement exists at Vienna on account of the quarrels and troubles aroused by the late misfortunes in Italy. The commission of Gen. UHRAN, the slayer of peasants and beaten of GARIBALDI, has been revoked for his refusal to publish the armistice. Gen. BENEDEK has been dismissed the service for improper language used in reference to the Imperial order of retreat given at Solferino. Gens. CLAM-GALLAS, NOSSIE and DE LEININGEN are to be tried by Court-martial.

VICTOR EMANUEL AND FRANCIS JOSEPH.—A Turin letter in Le Nord, of Brussels, says that VICTOR EMANUEL had an interview with FRANCIS JOSEPH after the signing of the preliminaries of Villafranca, and that these personages have a perfect understanding with each other as to the affairs of Italy.

Auditor Benton has issued the following notice to the Canal Collectors and Weighmasters concerning the non-payment of their salaries: "Your draft on the Auditor for your salary and expenses for the month of July, has been received at the Department, and the same has been audited and adjusted. In consequence of the failure in the appropriation of the present year to meet the expenses charged upon it, the Department will not be able to pay this sum until the 1st of October next; the same will, however, be paid as soon as the funds are available."

Statement of the Condition of the Public Schools.

WEDNESDAY, TUESDAY, June 14, 1859.

This Association is just closing its session to-day. Yesterday afternoon they paid the President a visit in a body, and were most cordially received. To-day the President sat in the chair in the hall for one hour, and listened with interest and evidently pleased attention, while addresses on the subject of Education in many States were given by the delegates. This afternoon the party is going to Mount Vernon.

A paper of peculiar interest, on the "State of Education in Mexico," was read before the Convention to-day, by M. JESUS ESCOBAR, a young gentleman from Chihuahua. It gave a very clear account of the condition of primary instruction in Mexico, and was heard with great interest. I send you a full abstract. In commencing his remarks, Mr. ESCOBAR alluded to his own position. He in pursuing his studies in this country, and expressed his gratitude for having been invited to address the Association which is composed, not of statesmen merely, but of teachers. He then proceeded as follows:

And yet I may not suppose that other cause of pleasure, which I derive from my presence as an humble representative of my people, from my humble efforts to develop and extend the noble and humanizing cause of education. There, at least, may I be instrumental in my degree—there, at least, am I allowed to the American people that that land of my birth is not wilfully close its eyes to the light of Christian civilization. Mexico does linger in the rear of nations, while her borders the steam-engine and the telegraph are things for wonderment. Immorality and superstition still find an resting place within her confines. Brothers are stand up in deadly strife against brothers. This is shameful indeed. But remember, fellow citizens, that there are the indications of the errors of infancy. But I will venture further, and tell you that Mexico is not yet born—that she is at least preparing for a regeneration from that which can scarcely be called life. It is scarcely in despair her for her weakness; and so much only laughing in the corner of knowledge, we laugh at her ignorance of the higher mysteries of the powers of nature, or we indulge in an unseemly pride. Who can tell where the end, be? There are reasons why the Union should look on the infant Republic as a younger sister growing up to her own requirements. This Union must protect her, and the way; it must stretch its hand to her and support her until she can safely rely upon her own unfettered efforts. It must help her to remove the rocks in her path, which may also shatter her better destinies. This would be obedience to the law of progress and fulfilling of the measures of civilization.

For my part, I am bold to say, gentlemen, that I am grateful to the thought that these things will be realized in time;—particularly do I feel that hope on this day, when you have been pleased to welcome me to your Association, not for any merit of mine, but perchance because you have marked in me an opportunity of your own blessings, and an honest desire to pattern by your example, whenever I shall return to my country to resume the exercise of your noble profession. Happy would I be could I take back with me the knowledge of your principles! This may not be; but I will to the echo of your fame and exert my feeble influence to have our children educated in the United States—the sanctuary of knowledge, the Greece of the New World!

In the act of expressing my hopes in relation to the training of the sons of my native land, I am reminded of an invitation, by some of the members of this Society, for a slight sketch of the condition of primary instruction in Mexico, and in the State of Chihuahua. I cannot conceal the mortification which I experience in addressing them in the language which I am compelled to use in regard to my country; and yet I cherish the hope that even this may be useful in some measure, for I consider that the story of Mexico's sister educational institution may direct the spirit of American improvement in that direction.

It is painful enough for me to say that in general there is an absence of the spirit of education. The children spend the earlier periods of infancy at their parents' side; and the mention of the word "school" during that period is an unheard of thing. But when the development of the animal spirits, with the corresponding development of the body, makes the child restless at home and drives him out in quest of companions and play, then do the parents begin to threaten him with the terrors of the school room. But on the day when he will have succeeded in making the looking-glass throw back a multiplicity of reflections not intended by the manufacturer; or when the plumage of the peacock will have tempted him to lay a spoiling hand on the glories of its tail feathers; or when the petulance of an idle mind will have instigated him to disturb the quiet of the pigeon-house; or finally, when the pressure of time unemployed will have urged him to invade the poultry-yard and instigate unnatural wars between matronly hens; on that day, the parental hand takes him by the nape and drags him to the bench of the school house. Such is, generally, the initiation of the Mexican child into the capacities of the mind. But, you will suppose, he is put under the informing hands of some approved teacher, such as those who minister in your public schools! This, indeed, is a generous dream! He is struck by the eye of some old crone, who, with switch in hand, keeps the school imprisoned little devils running through out the greater portion of the day, and carrel-like, the text and principal prayers of Ricalde's Catechism. Two or three years thus elapse; and by that time the child has learned to spell under the application of the worst of antiquated systems. Up to the time, which finds him thus circumstanced, and sometimes even beyond it, the child knows nothing of the existence of God. Such is the general character of our primary schools, which are disappearing from the capital, but which still obtain in the settlements of the States.

When parents tire of this state quo, then they receive to send them to other schools, which are in greater numbers and in which reading, writing and elementary arithmetic are taught, mixed up with a touch of Christian doctrine, so called; and when grammar is taught, with a measure of geography, it is held to be some achievement! Schools are generally supported by an appropriation of municipal funds, in the principal settlements of the district; but they are sometimes set up by vagabonds, who can find no other way of existence.

There is in the capital, a public institution, which, in the beginning, suggested cheering hopes; but unfortunately it has abated in vigorous usefulness from year to year, until it has come down to the level of the schools which I have just described.

An able European educator, Mr. GUSMAN, and after Mr. ROURY, a man of scholarly attainments, but more deeply touched by the mercenary spirit than was the former, dowered Chihuahua with a generation of intelligent youths; but they gave up the work and returned to their country as soon as fortune had rewarded their labors, and since that time the training of youth has failed to receive its full measure of attention; though it must be admitted that the people of the former institution play a creditable part in the society of the present day.

Mr. LEYVA LUNA, a native Mexican, in every way competent and worthy of controlling the education of youth, carried it on within late years, and with signal success, in the Mexican College, which was now placed under my management. This is a private institution, in which, in addition to the elementary branches, we teach Sacred History, Grammar in its four divisions, extending into the analysis of the structure of sentences. In addition to the Spanish language, the elements of the Latin, French and English languages; of drawing—geography in its three divisions, political, astronomical and political. In the last year of the Course the elements of Algebra are taught, with a compendious course of practical geometry.

And now, gentlemen, let the words of my conclusion be words of congratulations to you. Let me no further interrupt your labors, but let me, on the contrary, pray you, with the calm and the regularity which mark all things that are orderly, to proceed with their completion under the dome of this magnificent structure, provided by the munificence of one, the youngest, a friend to everything which has the touch of humanity. Let me, some of us younger, and the least experienced of the intellectual host before me, adjure you to continue, in order to contain us, of the less mature efforts, to go on with your noble work. Not yours, perhaps, the reward, which is carved out of the monumental marble that gives enduring life to the powerful of the earth. Your services, though living in the memory of generations, may not outlive your own to these anniversaries, on the return of which the boom of cannon startles the peaceful chambers of the grave. This is the appanage of warriors and of conquerors. But the stately language of philosophy and the living gratitude of those whom you will have sent abroad as the eloquent witnesses of your labors will take upon themselves to stamp these labors with the perpetuity of an honorable fame.

The Association has had a pleasant session here, and has been received with a cordial welcome.

The Impure Croton.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I noticed in your paper this morning two complaints against the Croton water. I had already published a note to the Times, and a few remarks yet will help to keep the ball in motion. The water has been growing worse and worse for a month or two past, and now it is nearly unpalatable. It smells and tastes pond-water that has become the receptacle for dead dogs, horses, etc. A gentleman who visited the lower reservoir about a week ago, told me that the smell of the water was very bad, that it had a stale, green appearance, and that the sides and edges of the basin were covered with slime. Who, pray, has the control in this matter, that he or they dare endanger the health of the community with this noxious stuff? The streets are being energetically cleaned, and the pleasantries and their infectious odor discharged, but the Croton water, that great boon of health and vigor to New-York, is allowed to become filthy and tainted to such an extent as must necessarily be injurious to the citizens using it either internally or externally, to say nothing of the detestable vapor which we continually breathe from the sprinkling of the streets. It would appear that the Water Commissioners, or whoever else has charge of the Croton, are taking their Summer rest. They need a little of our City Inspector's zeal, and we look to you to rouse them up.

"EIGHTEENTH WARD."

QUARANTINE.—Yesterday there had been no fresh arrivals at the Lower Quarantine. The brig A. Middleton, hence for ———, is at the lower anchorage. Mr. E. BRANNON, chief mate, of New-Zealand, having suddenly died of disease of the heart, just after partaking of breakfast, Dr. WOLFE had his body removed to the Upper Quarantine for inquest by the Coroner.

CITY INTELLIGENCE.

[illegible] Pennsylvania in Philadelphia.—The [illegible] yesterday says: "The Ludlow [illegible] Company, composed of firemen of New-York, will visit this city to-day, and be the guests of the [illegible] Company. They will bring with them a [illegible] engine. The Ludlow Association is composed [illegible] of the Manhattan Fire Company of [illegible]. Truly engine was built by the same par[illegible] the vessel appropriate for the South[illegible] Company of this city. When the Hope [illegible] York come that we may, we sincerely, and [illegible] that the Hope will receive praise in receiving [illegible]. During their stay the greatest of the [illegible] will be lavished with that of the Hope, and all [illegible] in this city will be fully exhausted in [illegible] the guests."

[illegible] Commissioners.—The Health Commis[illegible] met in the usual hour yesterday, all the mem[illegible] except Dr. Gray and Comptroller [illegible]. A resolution was adopted to abolish the [illegible] Foundrys and Eighty-sixth street and [illegible] Avenue. A bill of $[illegible] was pre[illegible] Burke for refreshments furnished [illegible] Bowman and his force between July [illegible] last. It was audited and ordered to be [illegible]. Capt. Samuelson, of the Quaker City, asked and [illegible] permission to discharge his cargo by lighters [illegible] the place where the vessel now lies at Ellis [illegible]. The Captain of the steamer Granada asked [illegible] permit. The application was referred to [illegible] and the Health Officer, and the Board ad[illegible].

[illegible] Accident.—A master-mason, named [illegible], died yesterday at the New-York Hospital from [illegible] received on the 9th inst., by the falling of a [illegible] from a house upon him, while he was at work in [illegible] Sunday in Centre-street. Mr. Brown, it was [illegible], was helping the girder, when the tackle parted [illegible] the first fall upon him breaking his arm and [illegible] him. Deceased was a native of this State, and 50 [illegible] of age. Two of his brothers, it is said, lost [illegible] by similar accidents. Coroner Gamble [illegible] the remains.

[illegible] Man Drowned.—About 2 o'clock yes[illegible] afternoon, a yawl boat, containing three men, [illegible] alongside the British brig Brothers, when off Bed[illegible], in tow of steamer E. L. Mason, and [illegible] to board her. The boat was capsized, and [illegible] every exertion was made by the Cap[illegible] of the tug-boat they were all thrown overboard. [illegible] were not been recovered. The Captain [illegible] the yawl, picked up a coat which may enable [illegible] to tell to whom they were.

An Intelligent Orang-Outang.—Experiment and Sent[illegible].—At 6 o'clock last evening, a fire broke out in a grocery store kept by Geo. L. Wentzenmann, [illegible] of Forty fourth-street and Ninth-avenue. The [illegible] was caused by a clerk in the store throwing a red-hot [illegible] into a cask full of spirits, which exploded and [illegible] the house on fire. Loss on stock, $2,000; in[illegible] for $1,000 in the Hamilton Insurance Company, [illegible] building, $600; insured.

Accident at Self-Destruction.—An old man named [illegible] Gunsaulus, a resident of Philadelphia, was [illegible] by officer Cornell, about 9 o'clock, on Sunday night, attempting to drown himself in a pool of stagnant water in Forty-second-street, near Eleventh-avenue. He was frustrated in his purpose. A woman named Louisa Gunsaulus, who resides at No. [illegible] Clinton-street, attempted to end her existence on Sunday morning, by taking laudanum. She was sent to the New-York Hospital for medical treatment.

Fatally Injured.—John Coerny, an Irishman, 35 years of age, was admitted to Bellevue Hospital, a few days ago, in an insensible condition, and suffering from a wound in the head. His injuries terminated fatally on Sunday. Coroner Gamble held an inquest, but the evidence failed to show how the deceased was injured. A verdict of "death from injuries, but received the jury are unable to say," was rendered.

Over an Bowsil.—A lad 13 years of age named [illegible] Gallagher, was overcome by the heat on Sunday afternoon as he was rowing a boat up the East River. He dropped insensible from his seat to the bottom of his boat. His condition was observed by some persons on the dock at the foot of Grand-street, near which place the boat had drifted, and the lad was rescued and taken to his parents' residence.

Steam-tug Launched.—On Saturday, the 13th inst., Messrs. Lawrence & Foster launched from their yard, foot of Williamsburgh, a steam-tug called the Wm. Cook. She is 105 feet on deck, 21 feet beam, 8 feet depth of hold, and is about 300 tons burden. She will be commanded by Capt. Owen Lee, lieutenant, formerly Captain of the steam-tug Rescue.

A Boy Suddenly Killed.—Henry Bittinger, a boy eight years of age, living at No. 238 Ninth-street, was instantly killed in front of James Harr's outside yard, corner of Ninth-street and Second-avenue, by a derrick falling upon him. Coroner Jackman held an inquest, and a verdict in accordance with the facts was rendered. The owners of the derrick were [illegible].

Taking Advantage.—A German woman appeared before the Mayor yesterday and charged Patrick Perry, a ticket operator at No. 100 West-street, with having extracted her out of $6 in the purchase of a passage ticket for Havre. The case was postponed until this morning for a hearing.

The Old Quarantine at Staten Island.

Should about some particularly unfortunate [illegible] happen to be passing, when we are only looking [illegible] to be seen, but assuming in the good sense and [illegible] of that otherwise loving locality. The people [illegible] naturally turned from their dwelling over the [illegible] of Quarantine, when other nuisances that [illegible] were palpable to the eye, and tenfold more offensive of the south, that the Quarantine hospitals [illegible], whereas being occupied. For two weeks past the Police boatmen and others, who have occasion to be among the shipping, have observed quantities of offal floating past the island, generally brought down from the direction of the City upon the ebb tide. Latterly these obstructions have become of almost daily occurrence, the quantity and disgusting character of the offal floating worse and worse as the heat of the weather increased. On Saturday night and Sunday morning an enormous quantity of offal made its appearance off the island. It extended along the edge of the tide ripple for a quarter of a mile, in extent, and consisted of skinned animals, and their entrails in every stage of decomposition. Portions of this positively revolting mass drifted among the piles of the Quarantine and ferry docks, but the larger quantity landed upon the New-Brighton side of the island. Several business wharfs made temporarily dark by it, and loud complaints were uttered by the people who live in proximity to the shores where it was, and the expressions against those who have been guilty of this outrage upon them were of the strongest. If they are contractors for the removal of offal from the City, who have taken this short and easy method of getting rid of their loads of filth instead of transporting it beyond the limits, they demand that such persons shall be called to immediate account. Harbor Policemen, who cruise in the neighborhood of Whitehall, assert that they have lately observed a great increase in this drifting offal, and state that it comes about equally from the North and East rivers. It comes down on the ebb tide, always at night, or early in the morning, so that a bloated carcass of some defunct horse is often mistaken for a boat, which their imaginations people with stealthy river thieves. The effluvia however often open their eyes to the real character of the floating substance, and then they immediately "starn all," and escape from the place. The "horse factory" at Forty fifth-street, North River, it is said, has not been in operation for some time, which may in part account for the present state of affairs touching this offal (awful) matter. The City Inspector says that the sloop Caution could not have deposited offal from the City there, as no such sloop had been chartered for offal removal.

RICHMOND COUNTY REGATTA CLUB.

The third annual Regatta of this Club came off yesterday at the First Landing, Staten Island, and was in every respect a success. The ferry-boats made half-hour trips during the day, and went down after 11 o'clock crowded to excess with passengers. The entire numbers assembled to enjoy the regatta of yesterday, was not less than 6,000.

The first race was for single pair scull boats, for which the following were entered: Thomas Jefferson, of New-York, rowed by Andrew Fay; Theodore Grover, of Newburgh, rowed by John Hanson; Thomas C. Burns, of New-York, rowed by Hugh Burns; Unknown, of New-York, rowed by Thos. Daw. After a spirited trial, the race was won by Hanson, of Newburgh, who beat Fay a very long distance, and apparently with ease. Fay came in second, Burns third. Daw gave up after rowing one half of the distance. The Newburgh boat took the first prize of $75, Fay the second prize of $25.

The second race was for 17-feet working boats without outriggers, to be rowed with two pair sculls. The following boats were entered and started, viz.: The George R. Winship, of New-York; the Abraham Powell, of New-York; the Lewis C. Meeks, of New-York, and David H. Dunn, of New-York. At the signal, these boats got away very prettily, and the race was most excellently contested. The Winship took the lead and kept it, although closely followed by the Meeks, which came in some three lengths behind her. The Powell third, some six lengths in the rear of the Meeks. The David Dunn did not finish the race. The Winship took the first prize of $60. The Meeks, the second prize of $20.

The principal excitement and attention was centered on the four-oared race, which comprised among its entries some of the most noted four-oared boats in New-York. At the signal from the judges' boat the following boats appeared: Charles McCoy, entered by the New-York Regatta Club; Leader, of Williamsburgh; George J. Brown, and J. Donnelly, of New-York. The Dan Bryant and the Wm. Liele, of Newburgh.

After considerable delay in getting them off, they shot away well together with the Battery boys in the McCoy on the lead, and the Donnelly second. During the race the Leader and the Newburgh boat, Wm. Liele withdrew from the course. As the boats approached the home stake-boat, the Bryant, of Newburgh, was seen to be the winner, with the Brown some two lengths behind; and after a short interval came the McCoy and J. Donnelly, almost side and side; in this manner they flew past the home flag-boat, the McCoy securing the third position by a few feet. The Bryant's prize was $160; the Brown's $25.

Messrs. Ray Tompkins, George Vreeland, and M. P. O'Brien officiated as the judges upon the occasion.

The Cross Court-Martial.

MAJOR CROSS' DEFENCE.

The Court-Martial of Major Cross was continued yesterday, at the Army Headquarters. The Court convened at 11½ o'clock.

Major Cross submitted several documents as part of his defence. Among them were letters from Gen. John E. Wool and Assistant-Quarter-Master Gen. Thomas, which gave Major Cross the highest character as a man and as a public officer.

W. B. B. Cross, Esq., of Washington, then read Maj. Cross' defence.

It claimed that when the order arrived to turn over his accounts to Col. Swearer, his books were in disorder, and it was impossible for him to tell what amount was strictly due the Government. Without waiting to have the matter fully investigated Major Cross made arrangements as soon as possible for paying Col. Swearer the entire amount claimed by the authorities at Washington. Major Cross said further, that in his anxiety to pay the entire amount claimed, some matters had been overlooked which in reality put the Government in his debt. He then proceeded to explain how it happened that a certificate which he signed stated that the entire amount of money for which he was responsible was deposited with the Assistant-Treasurer. This was the usual form in which certificates of the kind he alluded to were made out. Those which he signed, however, he altered in such a way as to make them read that he was personally responsible for the entire amount due Government, not specifying where the sums were deposited. This variation from the usual form he thought was what first attracted attention to the alleged deficiencies in his department. He proceeded to say that the Judge Advocate had not produced sufficient positive proof of the embezzlement with which he was charged, and complained seriously that the legal maxim that a man was to be believed innocent until proved guilty had not been acted upon by the Judge Advocate as it should have been. Too much, he thought, had been taken for granted by the prosecution. In conclusion, Maj. C. referred to his long service as a public official he having been connected with the army more than thirty years, in various capacities, and asked the Court if they must find him guilty technically on a charge of having violated military rules, to at least leave his character as a man unsullied, and not convict him of having embezzled public moneys. In making good Government moneys which were missing only through want of that strict system in which his accounts should have been kept, he had sacrificed the entire competency on which he had relied for his support.

The Judge Advocate followed with a brief reply. The prosecution, he said, was not for the recovery of money, and there was no question to be settled as to the amount still due Government. With that they had nothing to do. All they were to adjudicate upon was whether the accused was guilty of embezzlement or misapplication of public funds. To prove that he was, the Judge Advocate read from the regulations to show that moneys which were not forthcoming at the very time when they were called for were held to be misapplied or embezzled. He further said that had Mr. Fauntleroy been brought from California as the accused desired, it was highly probable that the cause of the Government might have been strengthened, as it would be possible to prove by him that the investigation of Major Cross' accounts had not been searching enough to prove the entire extent of misapplication of the public funds.

Major Cross replied that his own side would have been strengthened by the introduction of Mr. Fauntleroy's testimony. The Government, not he (Maj. C.), made the proposition to admit all it was expected to prove by him.

At this point the Court was cleared for deliberation. No further public proceedings will be had. The verdict of the Court will be announced from Washington.

Fatal Accident on Railroad.

[illegible]

On Saturday last, having occasion to visit Paterson in company with a friend, I purchased two tickets of the Erie Railroad Office in Jersey City, asking the ticket agent whether they were good for a return trip on Monday morning, as upon the other tickets. He answered me in the affirmative. But judge of my surprise when on returning with the 5 o'clock train on Monday morning, the Conductor told me they were worthless as I did not come up the 7 o'clock train; he also told me it was useless to apply to the office for redress (being advised so to do by a passenger) as I would get none.

This was the first notice I had of it, as the tickets, advertisements, or agent conveyed nothing of the kind. I hope this will be the means of exposing a unknown company which offers a bait in the shape of excursion tickets, and makes use of quibbles and technicalities that they may swindle the public under the miserable cloak of rules and regulations. S. M. PETTENGILL & CO.

It gives us pleasure to state that we have been doing business with S. M. Pettengill & Co., Advertising Agents, New-York and Boston, as advertising agents for the Courier for ten consecutive years. During all that time we have found them accurate in business accounts and prompt in paying bills. A well conducted newspaper advertising agency is a valuable institution both to the Press and the public. We cannot, therefore, do less than to our friends as the best advertising agents we know.

From the New Albany (Ind.) Daily Ledger.

We, too, have transacted business with Messrs. Pettengill & Co. for many years and in all that time have had no occasion to complain of them. They are model advertising agents insisting upon a strict compliance with the terms on which the advertisements are inserted—as it their duty is advertisers, who have to rely upon their honor for the fulfillment of contracts by the newspaper press—and when these are complied with, punctually paying the bills. Eastern advertisers who wish to get the worth of their money, should by all means give their orders to Messrs. Pettengill & Co., at their New York or Boston Agency.

From the New Orleans Delta.

Remarkably free from sectional prejudice and acerbity. The author knows negro nature profoundly, intimately; not through the cold light of ethnological science, but the warm, enkindling recollections of boyhood and youth.

From the Richmond (Va.) Dispatch.

One of the few accurate and natural portraits of negro character and life we have ever seen. Nearly all of them, including Uncle Tom's Cabin, and most of the replies thereto, are mere caricatures. Here is the genuine nigger, as he is seen in the kitchen and field every day.

CAUTION TO THE PUBLIC.

THE DRIGGS PATENT PIANO-FORTE.

Some two or three manufacturers of Piano-fortes, who have gained an ephemeral reputation during the last year or two, finding that the Driggs' Patent Pianos, as now made by Dunn, Parsons & Co. do not, as do not appreciating the old styles of unscientifically constructed instruments, have obtained some of the finest ever made under this patent on experiments, and are exhibiting them to their customers and to the public generally as samples of the Driggs Piano.

The whole plan of constructing this Piano was so different from that pursued for the last fifty years, that the ignorance and want of appreciation of its scientific simplicity by those first intrusted with its mechanical construction, led them into errors prejudicial to its immediate and successful development. Mr. Driggs, though not a practical Piano workman, is a skillful engineer in combined mechanics, and has presented some of the most interesting and important facts on the science of acoustics which have yet been developed. In addition to his scientific attainments, we have now brought into the business the practical experience of thirty-five years, together with every appliance to make these instruments equal in mechanical skill to any in the world; and this greatest and most important musical invention of the age is now fully developed.

To compare the first steamboat of Robert Fulton to one of the immense floating palaces which now navigate the Hudson, would be about as fair and honest a comparison as the one attempted by our competitors.

All who are interested in Musical or Scientific matters are respectfully invited to call at our warerooms, No. 565 Broadway, (one block above the St. Nicholas, and examine the Driggs Patent Piano as now perfected.

There is no longer a necessity for keeping chairs, splinted veneers, handless dolls, and broken crockery. It is just the article for cane, shell, and other ornamental work so popular with ladies of refinement and taste.

This admirable preparation is used cold, being chemically held in solution, and possessing all the valuable qualities of the best cabinet makers' Glue. It may be used in the place of ordinary mucilage, being vastly more adhesive.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The recommendation of Major-General G. W. Sanford and Brigadier-General Fred Evans having been published in the columns of the Times, I have, therefore, to request, as a matter of justice, that the same publicity be given to the following reply to such parts thereof as reflect upon my fidelity:

Major-General Sanford and Brigadier-General Evans have, with a view to their appointment to the Board and Commission of the City of New-York, recommended the appointment of a Committee to prepare an amendment to the Governor for the reorganization of the Twelfth Regiment, and that, "for the open and declared contumacy of officers, and insubordination, the Colonel of this Regiment was cashiered by a Court-Martial composed of honorable and impartial officers." But they have suppressed the fact that a challenge, duly sworn to, was submitted to the first-mentioned two contracted, against Brigadier-General Yates, the Friend and of the Court, wherein "the carriage assumed to be filled with it, prima facie, evident marks of malice, of prejudice and malice; and being true, cannot be contradicted. (De Hart, p. 118.) But the same was overruled by Major-Gen. Sanford, without any just reasons therefor.

And it is also a well-known fact, (of which Major-Gen. Sanford must be cognizant,) that Col. Duncan, by his letter made previous to his appointment as a member of the Court, and of what was pretended to be a trial of the officers of this division, made open declarations, (in the presence of said officers) the said Colonel, in which he exhibited malice of the strongest and most positive character.

Yet, having that a challenge, also, against this tribunal would be overruled by the Court, and the only effect it would have would be to strengthen Col. Duncan's animosity against the accused, such challenge was not offered.

It was evident that this Court was packed by Major-Gen. Sanford, with a determination to get rid of the accused, to whom he alluded at the officers' drill mentioned (and at which he was biased by many of the officers of the Division then present) as being the "person" at whose instigation a bill limiting the tenure of office in the Militia (which would have retired him from the Militia service) had been prepared for presentation to the Legislature, and which person he said he "could not hold a commission longer than a year."

But as to the truth or falsity of the assertion of the contractants, that the court-martial was composed of "honorable and impartial officers," an opinion can be better formed from the following extracts from its proceedings:

First—The Court having convened on the 9th of September, 1858, pursuant to General Orders No. 6, of Aug. 6, 1858, from Division Head-quarters, the following objection to its authority to proceed with the trial was presented:

"Col. John G. Coerr, commanding the Twelfth Regiment New-York State Militia, in the Fourth Brigade, hereby objects to the authority of this court-martial, composed of Brig.-Gen. Yates, Col. Bowman and others, to try the charges against him by Brig.-Gen. Jas. Evans, commanding said Fourth Brigade, for the following reasons, viz.:

"By section 9 of article 1, of title 7 of chapter 380, of laws of 1858, it is enacted that: 'No officer arrested shall be brought to trial * * * unless the officer ordering such court-martial (as specified in section 5) shall have ordered the same (the bringing to trial) within thirty days after receiving notice of the arrest, and a copy of the charges and specifications; nor until ten days after a copy of a list of the names of the officers detailed to form the Court shall have been delivered to the officer arrested, or left at his usual place of abode.'

"The object of this enactment is undoubtedly to save an officer from being kept in arrest an unreasonable time, and to secure him a speedy trial.

"If an officer can postpone the bringing to trial after the thirty days limited by law, he can postpone it for years, and thus keep an officer under arrest for an indefinite time without a trial. The very evil that this enactment is intended to prevent.

"Col. Coerr, therefore, claims that this Court has no authority to proceed with the trial."

The Judge Advocate admitted that the charges and specifications, with notice of arrest, were received by Maj.-Gen. Sanford on the 12th of July—fifty-eight days before which the members detailed to form the Court were ordered to assemble, organize the Court, and proceed with the trial. And yet the Court overruled this objection, and decided that it had full authority to proceed with the trial, notwithstanding it was then twenty-eight days after such limited time.

Though this decision may be considered by General Sanford and Evans as an honorable and impartial decision, it was, nevertheless, opposed to law, and the laws, therefore, illegal.

Second—The Court having determined, in opposition to law, to proceed with the trial, the following objection was made to the charge of disobedience of orders, viz.:

"Col. John G. Coerr demurs to the first charge and the specification under it, and pleads that if the facts stated in said specification were true, they would not constitute the offence charged." (Sub. 3 of par. 150 of General Regulations.)

The parades and duties of officers are fixed by law. Section 16 of chap. 338 of Laws of 1858, indicates and fixes the parades to be had; such as one as is omitted in this specification is not mentioned in such section, and there is, therefore, no law authorizing this parade. The order is, therefore, clearly illegal.

To disobey an illegal order is no offence. (General Regulations, par. 152. De Hart on Court-Martial, p. 168. O'Brien on Military Law and Courts-Martial, p. 83.)

The Court, in overruling this demurrer, admitted that there is a limitation of power as to parades for exercise. The statute provides that not less than eight nor more than 12 such parades shall be held annually. But, at the same time declared that "there is no limitation of power in regard to parades for other purposes, such as paying funeral honors to the dead, and dispensing with the Civil authorities in celebrating some great event, and that such orders might be issued, and it would be a sufficient plea to the Court-Martial to hold that this usage must govern in all well regulated troops, when it is not unreasonable or in opposition to express statements."

Here it will be observed that the Court cited an opinion by which it should have been governed, and thereby have sustained the demurrer instead of overruling it. For the enforcement of such parades would be not only unreasonable, but also clearly opposed to the special act of 1858, in relation to the First Division, which indicates and fixes in positive terms the number of parades the several corps in said Division shall be required to make in each year.

That it is unreasonable to compel an entire regiment, in opposition to their will, and when unprepared, to volunteer extra parades and duties, not required by the statute or contract with the State, and bear the expenses attending such parades for music, refreshments, &c., cannot possibly be denied by any "honorable and impartial" Court-Martial.

Yet this Court, first assuming without warrant in the specification, and without proof of the existence of a custom authorizing such extra parades, (and when the fact in the obedience of such orders has always been regarded as optional, and their disobedience was never deemed before this,) decided that this was in accordance with military usage, and no such court legally be instituted at the discretion of the Major-General, by the power given him in § 24, chapter 338, laws of 1858. Now, what is the question referred to?

"Sec. 24. The commandants of division shall discharge the duties, possess the powers, and be liable to the penalties pertaining to their office, as granted by law or military custom; provided that no division parades, except at the first division, or, in case of invasion, insurrection, or to aid the civil authorities, shall be ordered without the consent of the commander-in-chief."

Can it be truly said that there is any provision in this section of law to warrant an "honorable and impartial Court-Martial, of ordinary intelligence, to attach unto the Major-General of the First Division is legally vested with extraordinary power to order and authorize extra parades by authority of an assumed custom, which is both unreasonable and opposed to special enactments, as well as to General Regulations? (Par. 152.)

If such assumption of authority can be justified, it would be advancing this new and dangerous doctrine that a custom can annul a law created to limit the powers of officers; even further than the decision of this Court; when a law and a custom differ in regard to the same matter, the custom would prevail, and thus repeal the law.

It is very evident that the section referred to is intended expressly to prevent the ordering of division parades except at the first division, or in case of invasion, insurrection, or to aid the civil authorities) without the consent of the Commander-in-Chief, and without finding, Nor without that provision Major-Gen. Sanford, or any other, of the first division, would have the power to order division parades, when, from the large number of regiments embraced in their division district, it would be impossible to compel the assembly of the same. It extends the first division, and there is a special act by which that number is governed, and this act empowers the Major-General to order two division parades; but nothing short of the entire division, except in case of "invasion, insurrection, riot, tumults, breaches of the peace, and assistance to process."

Third—The second and third specifications of the third charge having alleged that Colonel John G. Coerr was guilty of it "unofficer-like conduct," in not attending a drill or improvement meeting of the officers and non-commissioned officers of the Fourth Brigade on the 6th day of May, 1858, and in not attending a parade of the Fourth Brigade on the 1st day of June, 1858, the following was stated in reply:

"To the second and third specifications some said third charge, Col. Coerr pleads in bar, by the jurisdiction of this Court, the illegal order and informalities, which he is charged in said, by reason of which the second and third specifications are not by law cognizable by this Court, but by a court-martial, as ordered by the Brigadier-General to try a delinquent returned to him, on such return, with that the facts stated in said second and third specifications were presented to the Brigadier-General of the Brigade, of which the said Twelfth Regiment was and is a part, previous to 6th June, 1858." (quote to these charges.)

By section 10 of chapter 338 of laws of 1858, it is enacted that "every officer, who shall appear on parade not fully armed and equipped, or without a uniform, shall be returned as absent and fined accordingly."

By section 17 "the Commandant of Brigades shall exercise the officers of their respective brigades at least twice in each year. . . . Every commissioned officer, for non-attendance at any of these meetings, when duly warned or summoned, shall pay a fine of five dollars."

By section 23 "Delinquencies and deficiencies of commissioned officers at any parade or drill shall, under the direction of the Commandant of the Regiment, be noted in a book by the Adjutant of such regiment, and shall be returned, certified by him, to the Commandant of the Brigade, who shall, from time to time, order a Brigade Court-martial for the trial of delinquencies so returned."

By paragraph 288, General Regulations, "no arrest need be made of any officer brought to trial before said Courts, nor shall any charges or specifications be necessary for the trial of such delinquencies and deficiencies, other than the return of the proper officer in regard to such delinquencies and deficiencies; nor shall the attendance of a Judge Advocate be necessary upon any such Court-martial."

By section 36 of article 3 of title 7 of chapter 338, laws of 1858, "The Court-martial by which any delinquent is tried, may excuse such delinquent, if it shall be made satisfactorily to appear to the Court that he has a reasonable excuse for such delinquency." (Sickness was the cause of the delinquency here specified, and such was stated to the Court, and would have been proven, had the jurisdiction of this Court to try such offences been recognized.)

It will here be observed, that the law declares non-attendance at a parade or a drill, to be a delinquency, and directs a fine as the penalty; while this charge was unofficer-like conduct, and the sentence was cashiering. The Court, on proof of a delinquency, cannot find the delinquent guilty, but must acquit him of unofficer-like conduct! the latter is an offence entirely different and distinct from the former; and to find one guilty of it, is equally as absurd as it would be to try and find one guilty of forgery for having published a libel.

De Hart, page 285, says: "In making up its findings on the charge, the Court has, therefore, only to determine whether the facts found do, in reality, amount to the crime charged. If the Court is of opinion that the specification found do not constitute the offence charged, it must acquit the prisoner of the charge, and, of course, can pronounce no sentence." (See also page 241.)

Yet the Court, in overruling this plea to its jurisdiction, decided substantially as follows: That it matters not though the statute does declare the offence specified to be none other than a delinquency, and triable only by a Brigade Court-martial, upon the return, and does prescribe a modest penalty therefor; and though the offences specified are not arrestable under the statute, and not triable under charges and specifications, and a Judge Advocate not necessary; such offence being here charged as unofficer-like conduct and the delinquent being under arrest, this special Court-martial is empowered to try the offence under this charge, and on proof of absence from a parade and a drill as specified, the accused shall be found guilty of unofficer-like conduct, notwithstanding the statute constitutes the facts proven a delinquency; and the sentence shall be cashiering, instead of the precise punishment (a fine) fixed by law.

By this same ruling, finding, and sentence, had the charge (or indictment) been murder, in being absent from a drill and parade, the delinquent, on proof of such absence, would be guilty of the crime of murder, and should be sentenced to be shot.

Yet the remonstrants say this Court was composed of "honorable and impartial officers." It can be said much more truly, that they were selected by Major-Gen. Sanford, expressly to do his bidding!

There are other decisions of this Court martial, and findings without evidence, and, contrary to evidence; but sufficient has been shown to enable any sensible person to judge as to the honor and impartiality of the officers composing this Court.

I will add that justice was not expected from this Court from the commencement, the remonstrants possessing the power to make such charges and complaints, and to arrest under charges of their own making; to pack such a Court and Judge Advocate as would be sure to gratify their animosity against the accused; to overrule all challenges against the President or members; to review the proceedings, and to send them back for revision; and to approve or disapprove the findings and sentence, as may best accord with their malicious designs; thereby having the power to crush any officer who may happen to fall under the ban of their displeasure. Thomas Carlyle writes of the "sheep and goats" of mankind in a letter addressed to Mr. Allibone, of Philadelphia, written in acknowledgment of the receipt of a copy of his Dictionary of Authors: "There seems to be no doubt the book will be welcome to innumerable reading beings, and tell them much that they wish to know; to me, the one fault was, that, like the Apostle Paul's sheet of Beasts, it took in "the clean and the unclean"—and thereby became of such unmanageable bulk, to say no more. Readers are not yet aware of the fact, but a fact it is of daily increasing magnitude, and already of terrible importance to readers, that their first grand necessity in reading is to be vigilantly, conscientiously select; and to know everywhere, that books, like human souls, are actually divided into what we may call "sheep and goats"—the latter put inexorably on the left hand of the Judge; and feeding, every goat of them, at all moments, whither we know; and much to be avoided, and, if possible, ignored, by all pure creatures! This is candidly my verdict; and I regret to think you cannot well like it; nor, as you perceive, had I any wish to produce it, till summoned."

The Rev. Dr. Breckinridge, of Kentucky, in declining the office of Professor in the Danville Theological Seminary, to which he was elected by the Old School General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, remarks as follows: "I do not think that it is my duty to undertake the work which the General Assembly has proposed to me; and, under this conviction, it is not proper for me to attempt it. Neither the brethren who offered it to me, nor the Church at large, would be willing to see me in it, without the full approbation of my own mind. I am obliged, therefore, to say that I do not see my way clear to enter it; and that I must try to serve the Church, as our Divine Master will help me, in another part of His work."

The Boston Herald says: "The Hon. Calusha A. Grow, Col. Scranton, the Hon. Henry M. Fuller, of Pennsylvania, and others, to the number of 18, arrived here Friday evening in the splendid yacht Treasure, of New-York, by the way of Newport. On Thursday they went down to Gloucester, and called on the Hon. Timothy Davis, spending the night at Gloucester, and they design continuing their excursion to Portland. On Saturday they were to dine with the Hon. Thomas Corwin and other political notabilities."

The wife of Mr. Arthur Andrew, a wealthy farmer residing four miles from Detroit, lately eloped with a negro named Jones, employed on her husband's farm. Her husband instituted a search, and found her in a negro house of prostitution in Chatham, Canada, in which place she had a day or two previously been delivered of a mulatto child. Being taken into custody, she confessed the truth without reserve, stating that the cause of her flight was fear of detection in an intimacy which had for a long time existed between herself and Jones.

[FROM THE WASHINGTON STAR, AUG. 13.]

The Washington Star of Saturday evening, has the following:

"A number of our citizens are noticeable just now for the marks of the blacking extreme, to which some of the successful member in which they have been treated by a wheedling concern, styled Evans Brothers & Co. Some days ago, the following notice appeared in the column of the Star, and, we believe, and was, no doubt, not carefully skipped out for reference by not a few of the large number who in these dull times are rather short of cash:

"Money to lend, in large or small sums, on approved personal or real security, on moderate rates, payable by installments or otherwise.

Apply, for terms, &c., to Evans Brothers & Co., No. 436 Broadway, New-York.

Notice.—All loans granted for the current month of July will be paid in Washington on the 16th of August instant. Persons corresponding with us are requested to meet Mr. Wm. Evans, at Willard's Hotel, on Tuesday and Wednesday, the 2d and 3d of August instant, between the hours of 10 and 4 o'clock.

To Attorneys, only.—Wanted, a gentleman in Washington to represent a well-known discount and investment company established in London and New-York. Must understand the principles of banking and making investments on real estate, &c. Address, with good references, Messrs. Evans Bros. & Co., No. 436 Broadway, New-York.'

On the arrival of the distinguished representative of the firm of Evans & Co. at Willard's Hotel, he was instantly waited upon by a number of anxious borrowers, and the arrivals of needy ones was so numerous and continuous that the financier was obliged to hold a perpetual levee in one of the parlors, and not a few waiters were kept in requisition to usher inquirers to the seat.

Among the victims rumor places a venerable, well-known, and much-esteemed city-journalist, who proposed to borrow some $16,000 to speculate in Western coal lands. Evans & Co. listened favorably, and even dispatched an agent to the West to ascertain the value of said lands.

A Colonel of this city, also well-known, wanted to borrow $20,000, some say to help build a new church; others, to speculate in lots in the vicinity of the Capitol extension. Evans & Co. closed with this Colonel, and so vastly pleased was the host with his guest that he offered his name as a reference for E. & Co.; so we hear.

Yet another well-known Colonel (the military men seem to have been the principal victims) paid $30 premium for $20,000 that he happened to want, and up to the time of the explosion of the swindle, was the best satisfied man in town that 'all was right.'

Col. ——, it seems, gave a security of $12,000, but the $20,000 not being forthcoming, letters were exchanged, and finally the applicant was invited to dine with the benevolent money-lender, which he did, and was wonder-struck by the magnificent style in which Evans & Co. did up things. Champagne was ordered, for instance, by the host, and the servant extending his hand for money to pay for it at the bar, the host feeling in his pockets declared he had no change, went to a trunk, threw it open, drew from it a large bandanna handkerchief filled with gold coins, caught one and tossed it carelessly to the servant. The guest, struck by this regal way of doing business, was so confident of the correctness and substantiability of Evans & Co., that, in opposition to the advice of his business adviser, he deposited little deeds (instead of giving a deed of trust) with the financier as securities, which deeds he has not since put eyes on.

Yet another Colonel (who is a lawyer as well) succeeded, after Herculean exertions and the procurement of a stunning list of references, in securing the highly-eligible position of attorney for Evans & Co. He, too, paid a premium.

A master builder of this city wanted $20,000, but went to work cautiously, depositing his premium, $200, with McGuire & Co., to be paid to Evans as soon as the negotiation was completed and the loan secured.

There are many others who attended upon the levees of the 'moneyed man,' but who 'ain't got nary word to say.' Consequently it is difficult to ascertain what the total of the swindle is.

Our prominent business firms were a good deal bothered for advice by acquaintances desiring to invest in the promises of Evans & Co. Their advice was, of course, to 'stand from under,' but it was pretty much thrown away.

Mr. T. J. Pinson, of the firm of J. C. McGuire & Co., in order to open the eyes of some of the confiding cases, addressed a letter of inquiry to the Mayor of New-York, which elicited the following reply:

MAYOR'S OFFICE, New-York, Aug. 11, 1859.

DEAR SIR: The Mayor has directed me to reply to yours of the 4th inst. That he has placed your note giving information of the operations of Mr. Evans, alleged to be a member of the firm of "Evans Brothers & Co., 436 Broadway," in the hands of Captain James Leonard, of the police force, and he reports that the whole of the building No. 436 Broadway is occupied by the "Manufacturing Confectioners" and by no other person or firm. Capt. Leonard reports that there is no doubt that the firm of "Evans Brother & Co." is bogus.

I am, respectfully, J. AULD, Clerk.

Prior to the receipt of this letter, however, the bird had flown, leaving his lately elated customers with terribly elongated visages, of course.

The representative of the firm of Evans, Bros. & Co. remained at Willard's Hotel two days, where he occupied a handsome parlor, in which he held his levees with the applicants for his financial favors, (and their name was legion,) during his brief stay. The last day of his stay he gave dinners to a number of his victims, whom he charmed with his off-hand business manners and intelligent conversation. In appearance, he is of slightly sallow complexion, with dark moustache and goatee, of medium height, and walks on one wooden leg, and with a cane. When he went away, he paid his hotel bill with a check on Col. Nelson, which was duly honored on presentation, after first informing his victims that he was going to New-York, where his money was deposited, and would return with the promised loans on the 16th inst.

The Massachusetts Military Encampment—Correspondence between Gov. Banks and Lieut.-Gen. Scott.

The following correspondence has passed between Gov. BANKS and Gen. SCOTT:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, COUNCIL CHAMBER, Boston, August 1, 1859.

To Lieut.-Gen. Scott:

DEAR SIR: I inclose to you in this note, which will be presented to you by Adjutant-Gen. STONE, of the Military Department of this State, a copy of a General Order for the encampment of the Volunteer Militia of this Commonwealth. It will be, I believe, the first general encampment of any State on this Continent.

It is intended to establish a more efficient military discipline than now exists in this department of the public service.

I am quite sure, from your interest in all that affects the welfare of our people, and their respective Governments, that any well-intended effort to improve the organization of citizen soldiers, in whatever State it may take place, will receive your approval.

We have now to beg of you an additional favor, if it be not incompatible with your duties, or your personal comfort. The citizens of Massachusetts desire to give you a soldier's and a citizen's welcome to this ancient Commonwealth—a welcome as hearty, as universal, as any man has ever received from the people of Massachusetts, since WASHINGTON here took command of the American Army.

It gives me great pleasure to add my own unworthy but sincere wish that I may have the honor of meeting you at Concord.

Most respectfully and truly,
I am your obedient servant,
NATH'L P. BANKS.

To His Excellency, N. P. Banks, Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Massachusetts:

SIR: I have had the distinguished honor to receive by the hands of your Adjutant-Gen., STONE, your Excellency's note, inviting me to be present at the general encampment of the Volunteer Militia of Massachusetts early in the next month.

Considering my many obligations to Massachusetts and your Excellency, personally, I should be highly gratified to be able to make the proposed visit, but am restrained—First, by a severe bodily hurt, from which I am not quite recovered; and second, because I have recently been obliged to decline so many similar invitations, that it might now be offensive to many other friends to accept one.

With the greatest respect and esteem,
I have the honor to be
Your Excellency's ob't servant,
WINFIELD SCOTT.

Destructive Fire at Lawrence, Mass.—Loss $100,000—Loss of Life.

The fire which occurred at Lawrence, Mass., on the 12th August, reported by telegraph, destroyed property to the value of about $100,000. It broke out at 2 P. M., in the upper part of the United States Hotel building. It was four stories high, the lower story being occupied by stores, and the rest was an unoccupied hotel, unfurnished, and the two upper stories unfinished. It was built last year. When the fire was discovered it had already filled the most of the two upper stories, and its spread was so rapid that some suspect that an incendiary set the torch after having saturated the rooms with camphene. The flames spread to the Central Congregational Church on the west, Union Block on the east, and the new Court House in the rear. In less than half an hour these buildings were a live sheet of flame. The first efforts of the citizens was to clear the stores under the hotel of goods. The slender brick walls on which the cupola rested suddenly gave way, and the entire front wall gave way and fell outward. The street was literally filled with people, of whom three, with their arms full of goods, were crushed beneath the mass of brick and iron. Two others, who were in the building behind these three, almost miraculously escaped, the wall falling just front of them upon the three first, and leaving those behind unharmed, except some slight injuries by the flames.

The bodies of these buried beneath the hotel wall were recovered after the fire had been somewhat subdued, and were identified as GEORGE SCAMLEY, an apprentice in the Lawrence Courier office; FRANK HENRY, one of the commission dealers whose stock was being removed; and LYMAN F. LAKE, employed in the Pemberton Mills. The bodies were much burned and disfigured. A fourth man was so injured that he died this morning.

A strong wind blew from the southwest while the fire prevailed. The belfry of the Unitarian Church, fifty rods distant across the common, was discovered in a blaze. A delegation of firemen extinguished it—but not till the belfry had fallen and the roof was destroyed.

The new Court-house was a fine edifice just being completed by the contractors. So substantial were the walls that they stand entire. The cost above the underpinning was $22,000. As the building was not yet accepted, the question arises whether the loss falls on the builders or the County. It was not insured.

The property burned comprises the hotel building, with six stores, held in litigation; the church block with five stores and two offices, owned in fee shares, by the Central Society; the next block east of the hotel, two stores; the new Court house, just finished; a paint shop and blacksmith shop, wooden buildings on Common-street, and the Unitarian Church.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I have watched with some interest the various rumors about the Croton water, to find quite one. For the information of your readers who do not take the trouble to think, I propose to give the cause. We receive our supply of Croton from two sources—the springs and brooks running from the mountains, and one the marshes and swamps. Now, this Summer has been a dry one, (I have a daily record,) for nearly three months we have not had a rainy week, and hardly a rainy day; for this reason the springs and mountain streams are many dried up and others diminished to a "trickle" consequently we are receiving our supply at present from the swamps and marshes. From a careful examination of the Croton water drawn from the hydrant on Saturday, the water is clearer, has much less deposit or floating matter in it, and is perfectly pure, as by chemical test it contains nothing unusual but the swampy, mushy or marshy taste. The jar I have standing, twenty inches deep, since Saturday, has not deposited enough matter to be hardly perceptible to the naked eye. We shall have this taste for a month to come, unless we have heavy rains, and should you wish to know a simple remedy for the evil, say so in your paper, and you shall have it to-morrow. E. B. R.

MONDAY, Aug. 15—P. M.

The Weekly Averages of the Banks of the City of New-York, on Saturday, Aug. 13, 1859, present in the aggregate the following changes from the previous exhibit of Aug. 6:

Decrease in Loans	$1,180,974
Increase in Specie	600,655
Decrease in Circulation	206,271
Decrease in undrawn Deposits	1,094,243

Including the Clearing-House operation of the week, which show the inter-exchanges between the Banks, and including also the Sub-Treasury statement of Saturday, the following is the general comparison with the previous exhibit, and also with the movement this time last season:

COMPARATIVE RECAPITULATION.

	Aug. 6, 1859	Aug. 14, 1858	Aug. 15, 1859
Capital	$66,545,000	$66,717,000	$66,545,000
Loans	118,986,659	123,374,499	117,797,145
Specie	29,669,877	31,180,472	29,744,822
Circulation	6,623,650	7,589,920	6,416,979
Gross Deposits	91,891,324	105,094,772	88,933,824
Exchanges	19,366,279	15,926,060	17,442,212
Undrawn	72,524,955	89,526,062	71,480,612
In Sub-Treasury	5,940,900	12,866,816	6,347,399

The Discount line on the Bank Statement shows a larger reaction by full half a million than was anticipated. The liquidation for the week is nearly twelve hundred thousand dollars, and without inconvenience to regular dealers, or disturbance to the Money Market. The latter, if anything, closed easier on Saturday, and presents a steadier appearance to-day than week before last. The addition to the Specie Average is about equal to the promise held out in the large banks down town, as reported in our weekly review this morning. The out-of-town Bank balances continue to be drawn down, particularly from the South. It will be noticed that the supply of Exchanges on New-York and Europe, held by the New-Orleans Banks, is materially drawn down, and we hear to-day that there is every probability that some Gold as well as Silver will come from that quarter before the Cotton season affords a sufficient supply of Exchange. The Granada delivered $411,000 in Silver from New-Orleans to-day. The local Deposits at Bank do not vary so materially. In some of the large Banks they run rather higher that at the close of July. The aggregate Deposit line, however, is down over a million of dollars, and the per centage of Specie on the present return is equal to 29 ⅌ cent., or 2 ⅌ cent. above the Associated Bank standard. The Sub-Treasury, to-day, disbursed heavily, say $567,000, against $251,000 received, of which $68,000 from Customs. The balance is now $5,031,478. The Hamburg steamer received out $251,000 in Specie. In the Foreign Exchange, the business thus far for Wednesday's mail steamer, the Persia, is light. On London, the rates for Bank signatures are 110@110¼ ⅌ cent., with business in Southern Bank bills at 110 ⅌ cent. Some sales of good Merchant bills at 109¾ ⅌ cent.

The Stock Market opened with less animation than was shown in the dealings of Saturday, and before the close of the early Board prices were somewhat weaker, say ¼@½ ⅌ cent., on most of the Railroad Shares. Michigan Central was a prominent exception. The sales were large at 42@42½ ⅌ cent., and in the afternoon the demand was renewed and the price further advanced to 43¼ ⅌ cent. At the Second Board, the market generally recovered the firmness which it had partially lost in the morning, and the closing quotations, with the exception of Pacific Mail, are about as high as on Saturday. State Stocks are about ¼ ⅌ cent. better on Tennessee and ½ ⅌ cent. better for Missouris. The fall in Pacific Mail was to 74¼@74½ ⅌ cent., about as rapid as the advance last week. Illinois Central Shares and Construction Bonds are higher, and some moderate orders are understood to have come out from England by the Vanderbilt. The Bonds brought 85½ ⅌ cent. In Erie Mortgages, there was a small sale of Firsts at 82, and of Fourths at 38½ ⅌ cent. There was a sale of the La Crosse Land Grants at 15½ ⅌ cent. The general market left off firm.

Mr. ADRIAN ISELIN has been made Vice-President of the National Bank, to take charge during Mr. GALLATIN's absence in Europe.

The revenue of the Delaware and Lackawanna road for the six months ending 30th June, was:
